WHITEST TEETH can be yours when you change to Pepsodent—because only Pepsodent contains Irium, the exclusive ingredient that provides the greatest cleansing action ever offered.

Because of Irium, Pepsodent cleans teeth thoroughly—cleans better between teeth—gets rid of dingy film. Because your teeth are cleanest they're safest from decay. You'll like Pepsodent's fresh minty flavor—it leaves your breath so clean, so sweet.

Remember, Pepsodent with Irium gives you, too, the whitest teeth because it gives you the cleanest teeth. Get Pepsodent today.

PEPSODENT GIVES THE WHITEST TEETH

MOTHERS: the truth about tooth decay

SCIENCE has proved that much of the decay that makes cavities is caused by acid-producing bacteria, formed by food particles left on the teeth after eating. The surest way to fight tooth decay is to keep children's teeth clean through brushing with Pepsodent right after eating.

CHAPTER XII

Anna's first gesture of hospitality toward the Fontaines met with an unexpected check. Oliver and Mrs. Fontaine wrote charming notes, expressing their deep regret at their inability to accept the invitation. But the fact remained that they did decline it. Now that Mrs. Fontaine had shaken off the shackles of her long seclusion, she was seeing more of her friends than she had in many years, and she was already pledged to several engagements for the period that Anna had indicated for a visit.

Anna showed the letters to Breck with expressions of regret that were genuine, and he saw that she was making an honest effort to keep from being resentful. Of course she would ask them again later, she said. There was no doubt about it, she was softening visibly in the congenial atmosphere of Splendida. A little awkwardly, because it was so long since he had done such a thing spontaneously, Breck bent over and kissed her. She returned the kiss almost shyly, like a girl, but she did not do so coldly or mechanically. When Breck raised his head, she stretched out her hand, and took his, of her own accord.

"Breck," she said. "I've been thinking about what you said when we first went to New Orleans—about your entering politics, you know. I believe you were right and I was wrong. I believe it really would be a very good idea. You ought to make an effort to get around in the parish, meeting the men who are the local leaders and finding out their problems and interests, first of all. After you have an idea of their general views, you'd know whether you could broach the subject of a possible candidacy. If they were receptive to the plan, I suppose you'd want to begin asking them to your house and going to theirs. Anything I can do to help entertain them—and perhaps you'd like to go up to Baton Rouge, and talk over your possible prospects with some of the politicians there, I'll go with you, if you wish. Or if it would be likely to antagonize people who might help you, having a woman around, at the beginning anyhow, I'll wait.

"I'm tremendously pleased that you've changed your mind about that political bee I have in my bonnet. I'll get to work right away—locally, at first, as you say. Then later I'll go up to the Capital. I've been thinking of doing that anyhow. Well, so long, Anna, and thanks for everything."

He left her and went to the front portico and down the steps toward the lawn where Drew was playing, trying to tell himself that there was nothing for him to worry about any more, that everything was going to come out all right after all. He, too, had received a letter in the morning mail. Marie Celeste, instead of writing to Anna, had written to him. The impulse which had caused her to do this was natural and friendly, the letter itself was as innocent as it was gay. To him it was utterly charming from start to finish, though it was slightly disturbing in places; he could not bear the thought that anything so sweet should be submitted to satire. So he had been silent, as if he were ashamed. He had smirched Celeste's letter himself by his deliberate concealment of it. And now he really was ashamed.

As Breck reached the bottom of the great flight of steps, Drew bounding over the grass to meet him. Besides a lamb, which gambled gracefully but endearingly after Drew, two puppies tumbled about at his heels and he carried a small fuzzy kitten in his arms. He held the kitten up to his father. "Stroke her, Daddy," he said. "She's as soft as—as I don't know what, but she is as there as soft as a kitten. A baby?" "Yes, a baby's very soft too. Differently from a kitten, of course. Here, take your kitten. I want to read a letter."

"Aren't we going to see the ditches?" "Yes. But I want to read this letter first."

He sat down on one of the iron seats that were scattered at intervals over the lawn. Drew, cuddling the kitten again, stood still, regarding him attentively and a little anxiously. It made Breck feel uncomfortable to open Marie Celeste's letter while confronted by his son's watchful gaze. But once he was on horseback there would not be another chance until dinner time. He could not wait that long to read it again.

Dear Breck: Mama has told me about the lovely invitation from you and Anna, and I know she and Oliver are writing Anna to tell you both how sorry we are that we cannot accept it. Mama says that perhaps if Anna asks us again we can come to Splendida later on in the Spring, and I hope we can, because I have always heard so much about it and wanted so much to see it.

I have learned two new songs since you were here, the Valse Brune and Coeur de ma Mère, and I am very eager to sing them to you. I have not sung La Delaisée since you were here, Delaisée.

Affectionately yours, Marie Celeste de Fontaine

Breck refolded Marie Celeste's letter very slowly and put it back in his pocket. Then he looked up and saw that Drew was still standing in front of him, squinting and stroking his kitten and staring at his father with solemn and troubled eyes. Breck jumped up and put his arm around the little boy. "Come on," he said. "Set that ball of fluff down on the seat and get yourself a cap. We must be off to see those ditches before it gets any later."

—BAPTIST CHURCH Y. P. U. — The Senior Y. P. U. of the Summerside Baptist Church held its regular meeting on Wednesday evening in the Hall with the president, Miss Shirley Poole, in the chair during the business session. The minister conducted the worship service which opened with the singing of "Unto The Hills" with Miss Ruth MacFarlane at the piano. The scripture reading was in Judges 7 and the meditation was based on the story of Gideon and his three hundred followers, after which the hymn "Will Your Anchor Hold" was sung. The general theme of the study period, conducted by the minister, was "The Journey of Life" and the topic stressed was "Which Way Shall I Go?" Badminton was played at the close of the meeting.—S.

—HOSPITAL LADIES' AID — Mrs. Heath Strong presided over the March meeting of the Ladies' Aid of Prince County Hospital on Wednesday afternoon in the Nurses' Home. Mrs. Albert Sharp was welcomed as a new member. It was announced that the East Ward Pantry Sale will be held the last Saturday in March and Mrs. W. P. Callaghan was appointed convener and to choose her own committee. It was decided that a Rummage Sale would be held in April. The Book Trough for which plans were made some time ago has not yet been completed, but it is hoped it will soon be in operation in the Hospital for the pleasure of the patients. As a Ways and Means of raising funds a series of afternoon bridges will be held in the Nurses' Home during the month of April, the conveners being: April 4, Mrs. William Hayward and Mrs. T. H. E. Inman; April 11, Mrs. D. F. McNeill and Mrs. Mark Delaney; April 18, Mrs. Frank MacNeill and Mrs. W. P. Callaghan; April 25, Mrs. W. A. Currie and Mrs. C. H. Stewart. The secretary was authorized to send a letter of sympathy to Mrs. H. T. Holman in the recent bereavement of her sister; and a Get-Well card to Mrs. J. R. Cunningham. Regret was expressed at the illness of Mrs. R. L. Willet. After the meeting adjourned a social period was enjoyed when Mrs. D. Bryenton served tea.—S.
