Labor Minister Considers New Run-Throughs Probe

By BEN WARD
OTTAWA (CP) — Labor Minister Nicholson has been sounding out labor and management groups on the possibility of a new inquiry into the controversial proposals advanced last December in the Freedman report on CNR crew run-throughs.

Mr. Justice Samuel Freedman of Winnipeg, who investigated the CNR dispute as a one-man federal commission, recommended that the law be amended to force employers to negotiate the introduction of automated techniques that affect working conditions.

As the law now stands, unions are legally powerless to protest the dislocations caused by work changes introduced while a collective agreement is in force.

Those who have been involved in the conversations say he appears to favor a royal commission that would hear from all industries under federal jurisdiction — railways, airlines, banking, interprovincial trucking, grain mills, shipping, broadcasting, pipelines, telephone systems and the like.

Since taking over the labor portfolio last January, Mr. Nicholson has been under heavy pressure from labor and management groups on the Freedman issue. Labor organizations have been unanimous in demanding action on lines laid down in the report. Management spokesmen are vigorously opposed to it.

The labor minister's public statements on the issue so far have been noncommittal, arousing criticism from some union leaders.

BECOMES KEY DEMAND

Adding to his dilemma, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen (BRT) has made the Freedman principle one of the key demands in its current contract dispute with the CNR. Negotiations have broken down and a conciliation board is being set up to seek a settlement. If this fails, the trainmen are prepared for a strike that could force the minister to make a decision.

Mr. Justice Freedman's terms of reference, prepared by former Labor Minister Allan MacEachern who has since been switched to the health portfolio, invited him to extend the run-through proposals to "similar situations arising in future."

SEE HUMAN PROBLEMS

It found that the CNR had a legal right to introduce the run-throughs but should not have done so without negotiating with its unions on the human problems involved.

Mr. Justice Freedman's terms of reference, prepared by former Labor Minister Allan MacEachern who has since been switched to the health portfolio, invited him to extend the run-through proposals to "similar situations arising in future."

WASHINGTON (CP) —

External Affairs Minister Martin is expected to confer Wednesday in Toronto with Averell Harriman, United States ambassador at large. Harriman will address the annual dinner of The Canadian Press in Toronto tonight and Martin is to attend.

As an alternative, the unions may demand that Mr. Nicholson introduce legislation based on the Freedman report and let both sides fight the issue at hearings before the Commons Labor committee.
