BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

TOO MUCH OF A GOOD THING

Who seeks to gain beyond his need is sure to be accused of greed. —Reddy Fox.

The trouble with this world is that there is too much greed everywhere. Sometimes it is found even on the Green Meadows and in the Green Forest. Greediness is one of the worst forms of selfishness. Folks who are not selfish very seldom are greedy.

Bobby Coon was feasting in the treetops. He was feasting in the treetops because in the treetops was one of his favourite foods in the autumn. You see grape vines climb. They had climbed up in the treetops along an old fence. And now the grapes were ripe. They hung in purple and green clusters. What's that? You think I've made a mistake? No, I haven't. There is one kind of wild grapes that are ripe when they are still green. And both kinds were hanging in the treetops where Bobby Coon was feasting.

New Bobby was selfish. I suspect that most people are selfish at one time or another. They are most likely to be selfish when they have least cause to be. Looking down from his high perch in the treetops Bobby could see Reddy Fox sitting on the ground below and looking up longingly. You didn't know that Reddy Fox is fond of grapes? He is. Grapes are a treat to Reddy when he can get them. But he couldn't get those grapes up in the treetops. Of course not, Reddy isn't a climber. He can sometimes get a little way up in the tree, but seldom more than a little way. On the other hand, his cousin, Grey Fox, is a very good climber. Had he been in place of Reddy, he would have climbed up in the tree to get his share.

Bobby Coon ate and ate. Those grapes tasted good. Now and then he would drop one and he would grin to see Reddy Fox gobble it up. Yes, sir, he would grin to see Reddy Fox gobble grapes up off the ground. They would roll under the leaves on the ground, but Reddy would find every one. It was such a simple, nice little thing that Bobby Coon might have done. He might now and then have dropped a whole bunch. He didn't. No, sir, he didn't once drop a whole bunch. There were more grapes than he could possibly eat at one time, but he was selfish and greedy. He wanted all for himself although he couldn't eat all of them. Selfishness and greed are always like that. So he just stuffed himself.

After a while Reddy Fox went away. And a little later Bobby Coon couldn't eat another grape. He had stuffed himself, and not another grape would go down. Bobby debated. Should he rest up there in the treetop, or should he go back home. His stomach was so full that he didn't feel like moving. No, sir, Bobby didn't feel like moving. After a while Bobby didn't even feel like sitting still. He wanted to lie down. The truth is, Bobby Coon had a stomach ache. Green apples and stomach aches often go together. Not far away was an old nest of Blacky the Crow. In fact, it was in the next tree. Bobby decided that that was a good place to which to take his stomach. So he climbed down from the tree he was in and climbed to Blacky's old nest, and he took his stomach ache with him.

"I wish," whined Bobby, "I hadn't eaten so many of those grapes." He wished that a good many times before daylight. Bobby Coon really was suffering. He was suffering from too much of a good thing. It is one of the most common complaints in all the Great World.
