ELLEN'S DIARY

No Matter The Birthdays Age Is Quality Of Mind

Now in the turn of the year, February brought us at Alderlea today, another anniversary of our senior farmer's birth. This was, for the entire family, a privileged, and happy occasion.

"Happy birthday to you... happy birthday dear grandaddy, happy birthday to you!" the three lads sang to him, when they came by from their house across the lane this morning. And we much doubted that for him, world-over, there could be hard a sweeter refrain, or words more sincere than those expressed by these youngsters, who presented him then, with their own chosen gifts.

"Dear, dear, my birthday!" James exclaimed. "Why, so it is. And to think that I was almost forgetting it!" he smiled. Thoughts of the farming, of welcoming lambkins, and the many other doings and plannings, leave this farmer little time besides to consider more personal matters.

Beautiful the morning was. And the day, a perfect one of winter's fading store: brilliantly sun-washed, jewels glinting in opaline shades on the pure white breast of the snow.

"It's a lovely morning" Mack observed.

"It surely is" James agreed "I was just telling your grandma it reminds me of those on toward the last of March, clean and a little frosty — and pretty."

"What was it like on the day you were born?" Mack wondered.

"They always said it was a mild day, warm, with showers of rain." James replied.

"Born in the hospital" Mack said.

"No indeed. I was born in that room there" he nodded "And it was the Doctor — he was only a young man then — who lived in that house at the Corner, who brought me to the world."

"To farm" Mack commented. "To farm" James smiled.

"I guess, young fellow" Mack remarked to Alex, noting the time, "you and I had better 'back track' home, and get ready for school. The morning's passing, you know!"

"And" Peter suggested to James, "let's you and me get out to our work!"

A year older, James is. Hair a bit whiter, eyes' lustre naturally somewhat faded. But boyish figure retained. Active, though as he will acknowledge to one or the other of his older grandsons, when they invite him teasingly to a clinch, he had not "the inclination of once to have a friendly wrestle!"

Yes, he is pleased still to be "one of the boys" at the farm-work. Interested in its every phase, he continues to be. Interested too in the family, down to the small ones, whom he finds particularly naive and sweet.

A year older... But then as some one reminds us, after all "Age is a quality of mind.

If you have left your dreams behind,
If hope is cold,
If you no longer look ahead,
If your ambition's fires are dead—
Then you are old!

But if from life you take the best,
And if in life you keep the jest,
If love you hold;
No matter how the years go by,
No matter how the birthdays fly—
You are not old!"

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night.....

ST. MARK'S WA

"A faith which does not show itself in our words is just as dead as a faith that does not show itself in our works", was an arresting statement made by Mrs. Walter Moase during the study session of St. Mark's Anglican WA at the February meeting. Her presentation of "The Power of Words" from the study book, "The Kingdom, the Power and the Glory", was a revelation of the relations hip of man to the word of God who "took upon himself the form of a man". A discussion by the members showed the keen interest taken in the study.

The meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Elmer Paynter.

The devotional period which opened with a hymn, was taken by the president, Mrs. Elmer

Household Hints

When making boiled starch, add a little soap flakes to the solution to keep the starch from sticking to your iron.

Frankfurters are juicier and the skins won't burst if you first boil just enough water to cover them, then add the franks, cover, remove from heat and let stand 7-8 minutes.

Save time, steps and money by using your oven to cook a complete meal instead of just a single dish.

Window sills come clean with little or no effort if you give them a coating of wax to protect the finish and make it possible to wipe off rain and dirt quickly.

Add remaining sugar, 2 tbsp. at a time, beating 25 turns after each addition. Add vanilla, almond; beat 10 turns. Sift half flour mixture over egg white mixture. Lightly fold in flour, turning bowl gradually, using in all 15 complete fold-over strokes; fold in remaining flour same way.

MARY HAWORTH

Haughty Air May Mask Sense Of Inferiority

Dear Mary Haworth: The recent letter from the girl, 17, who feels ugly and never has dates struck home to us. Except that our 17-year-old isn't ugly.

She is a pretty girl with charm and poise who gets along beautifully with adult groups. But with her own age group she is a flop. She has no friends except one girl at a time and when that girl makes other friends, girl or boy, our daughter drops her.

She won't go with boys her age (very few have ever asked her). She likes older men, more mature (who don't ask her). She is extremely critical of both girls and boys, saying this or that one is stupid, will go with anybody, etc.

Several girls have called her to accept blind dates, which utterly insults her. She wants some young men, faded with wealth, to worship at her feet.

She adds no warmth to a young group, sparks no interest and is miserable most of the time. We've tried to draw her out, but she considers us old creeps who don't understand. She goes to our friends to discuss the problem, sheds tears and gets them very upset. Then we sit and talk things over, to no avail.

She dislikes school, her teacher, anything required of her by her parents, school regulations or any authority. I cannot sleep nights worrying how to help, which way to turn, what to do next. We (her parents) are very confused and will try anything you suggest.—D.D.

Dear D.D.: Your daughter sounds as if she may need expert psychological help in getting squared-off as a person.

Strange as it may seem, her air of self-sufficiency is probably a cover-up for a deeply felt but unrecognized sense of insecurity, inadequacy or inferiority in relation to her own age-group or in respect to goals she longs to achieve.

Her aloofness, hauteur, mockery and cool rejecting evaluation of everyone and everything are neurotic traits. She may be a chronically depressed, emotionally isolated (or withdrawn) person.

Her disdainful air may mask an unconscious sense of injury and anger at the human race (her own family especially) for failing to understand or acquiesce in her ego-demands—which may be of a most infantile sort. She may want and need reality in overcoming an essential quaking timidity (cloaked in proud defiance).

Some time ago it was my privilege to see an instructive movie, "David and Lisa," which depicts two adolescents, emotionally out of touch with reality, whose paths cross at a sanitarium for disturbed youngsters.

The sensitive tale of their suffering presents an extreme illustration of the direction in which your daughter may be facing.

In the movie, we see David and Lisa, tardy aware of each other's isolation, warily working their way towards a kind of rapport in coping with a world that frightens them. We see the first glimmers of self esteem and trust in the other beginning to dawn in their guarded exchange.

As the story ends, we sense that they have passed the crisis of sick- sick self- rejection and rejection of life, and are heading towards recovery— which needn't consist in being like other people, but rather in being themselves, harmoniously, with a live- and- let-live acceptance of valid human differences.

The moral of the tale, applicable to you, is that emotionally disturbed youngsters (such as your daughter seems to be) need analytic help, and their parents need parent- education from the same source, to solve their mutual heartache.—M.H.
