A TRAGEDY IN PERMUTATIONS

"The usual rate," they said, "but perhaps we had better be specific. What's your idea?" I hadn't an idea in the world, but thought 5 per cent liberal. In order to get it I considered I must ask more and then come down, so I said:

"How does 20 per cent strike you?" They looked at me curiously for a moment and said:

"Will that be entirely satisfactory?" I now saw that I had asked too little, but it was too late, and I closed at that figure, though I heard one of them whisper to another, "Dead easy."

All this took time, but it was arranged that the arms should be shipped whenever I gave the word, which was not to be until the provisions were in Cordova and the men arranged for. I now made up my mind to ship the goods and arms, take my commissions and back out of the whole affair; but, of course, I kept my own counsel about this. I got letters and cablegrams from Bosenko frequently, but he was very careless about the cipher, and I was in constant fear of being detected.

The thorn in my flesh at this time was the office boy. He was a deep one. He knew something was going on, but couldn't get at it, so he bled me. He demanded double wages in a way that made me shiver, and I gave it to him. He was careless about getting to the office, but when I remonstrated he assured me he had to stay home with his bedridden mother. He used my typewriter as if it were his own and drove me to the verge of distraction, but every time I started to have it out with him there was a look of honest industry on his face that made me quail.

Finally I could stand it no longer, and one Saturday morning I told him we must part that night, and he demanded a month's wages in advance, which I dared not refuse. That afternoon the provisions were shipped, and the agent and I had a lunch at Savarin's, during which four cold quarts were offered as libations to the god of revolution. I got back to the office at 7 o'clock and wrote out a cablegram to Bosenko, announcing the shipment. It was nearly dark, the electric lights were in trouble, and the wine made me giddy. I wrote out the message as follows:

Bosenko, Cordova:
Shipped by steamer Barcelona—5,000 flour.
1,000 cheeses.
300 mess pork.
75 cases biscuit.
1,000,000 hard tack.
Biggerstaff will draw on sight.
Everything going well.

HOSEA BOGGS.
This did not need a cipher, as provisions were not contraband nor likely to arouse suspicion. I rang for a messenger, but on reading the message it looked so illegible that I concluded to copy it on the typewriter. I went to the desk and copied it hurriedly and handed it to the boy without reading. He soon came back and said I must sign my name and address on the back and told me the amount it cost, which seemed large, but I was flushed with wine and careless, paid him and rushed for a train to the country, where for two days I made merry with friends, so glad was I to get one part of the business off my hands.

I was coming back to town Tuesday with a dark brown taste in my mouth and a bad headache, when I bought The Globe and looked carelessly at it. In a minute my head was on fire. There in glaring headlines was the following double leaded dispatch:

ANOTHER REVOLUTION.
An Attempt to Seize the Government of San Castaragua Frustrated.
A BIG SCHEME BLOTTED.
Hosea Boggs of New York Ships Men and Ammunition to Cordova.
BOSENKO IS IN JAIL.
The New York Conspirator to Be Arrested by the United States Officers.
(Special Cable to the New York Globe. Copyright, 189—)

Cordova, July 9.—A sensation was caused here today by the arrest of General Hernandez Bosenko, charged by President Casco with attempting a revolution. The city is wild with excitement. The revolution will not succeed. It seems that Saturday night General Bosenko received a cablegram from his New York agent, Hosea Boggs, as follows:
Shipped by steamer Barcelona—5,000 rifles.
1,000 revolvers.
100 cannon (rifled).
75 good soldiers.
1,000,000 cartridges.
Government will recognize revolutionists. Monroe doctrine goes.
This cablegram was lying on General Bosenko's desk when your correspondent called Sunday morning. The general was out. Your correspondent saw it was important, as it was in cipher. Fortunately the key was in one of the general's pigeonholes (they are very careless down here), and your correspondent soon deciphered the message, though there were many mistakes, evidently in transmission. With The Globe's usual enterprise, President Casco was informed, and last night Bosenko was lodged in jail. The United States was wired through the San Castaraguan minister at Washington to arrest Hosea Boggs, who, it will be remembered, was a partner in the devilry that old Flamingo was concerned in, which came out at his death. Reports from New York show that Boggs has been spending large amounts of money and talking mysteriously when in his cups. It is known that Bosenko was in New York in May.
The government has made every preparation to seize the Barcelona when it arrives, and the revolution will be put down without trouble. It is feared that many prominent men are invoiced. Bosenko says it is all a mistake, and he can prove his innocence.

THOMAS WALLING.
Then followed this local item:
Hosea Boggs is well known in this city. He was formerly a newspaper man, but left that business for trade. Since Flamingo's death he has been doing little apparently, though he has been spending money freely. Yesterday his office was closed, not even an office boy being there. It is believed he got a tip from Bosenko and has left the country.

Hamlet Was Thirsty.
Alfred Darbyshire of Manchester tells a funny story of Sir Henry Irving. "Hamlet" was being played, and Mr. Darbyshire was Polonius. "I remember," he says, "the weather was very hot, and after being consigned to oblivion I was sitting on a table behind the tapestry, fanning myself, when, to my astonishment, Hamlet drew aside the tapestry, and, repeating the well known words, 'Thou rash, intruding fool, I took thee for thy betters,' he gave an agonized look, and sotto voce exclaimed: 'For goodness' sake, get me a pint of stout. I'm as dry as a limekiln.' This from the Prince of Denmark startled me, and for some little time I failed to take in the situation."

Artificial Teeth on Metal Plates
A dentist who knows his business, and one that has any regard for his patients will always advise them to have a metal plate.
PROF. MELVILLE B. BUCKLEY,
Instructor Boston Dental College, Boston Mass.
In view of the vast amount of injury done to the mouths of wearers of rubber or vulcanite plates, by the retention of undue heat, owing to the non conductivity of rubber, and as aluminum is now so cheaply produced, and making as it does a rigid, light, clean, unobjectionable plate there seems no reason why any person should wear a rubber or vulcanite plate. Not only this, but better results in fit and adhesion are obtained in difficult cases, than in the use of rubber.
L. P. HASKELL D. D. S.
Chicago Ill Dental School
The above quotations are from hundreds by eminent dentists whose close observation in many years experience in plate work has learned them the many advantages of metal over rubber.
Many persons who are compelled to wear artificial teeth on a plate find that the ordinary plate causes heating of the mouth, bad taste, shrinkage of the gums, etc., finally causing the plate to get loose, sometimes sore lips, sore mouths and sore throats, and caused directly from the wearing of an ordinary plate.
We recommend a metal plate either of Gold, Platinum, Aluminum.
It is a conductor of heat and cold, it is non-irritating, and is thinner, lighter, and stronger than any other plate.
We have testimonials from persons for whom we have made metal plates—not one would wear an ordinary plate again. You can have your impression taken, and a metal plate made—same day, fully guaranteed because we make them ourselves, and know all about the material used. Call and see specimens of our work.
Every piece of work done by us must give entire satisfaction to the patient, else we will not allow it to leave our office.
See our artificial teeth without plates.
