LETTERS WE WRITE.

LAVISH WITH BRIGHTNESS, BUT RE-SERVED WITH CONFIDENCE.

Exercise Care and Judgment When You Write - Young Girls Advised to Not Gush - The Sweet Story in the Old Love Letters.

It would not be well to ask that fewer letters be written, but to make a plea for better letters is certainly reasonable, and for one would like to make it just now. Women are the letter writers of the world. Of course the greater number of stamped envelopes that are intrusted to Uncle Sam's care come from the hands of men, but this majority is due to business. It is not of business letters I am thinking. The up to date business letter is quite perfect. It is the letter of the newsy, chatty sort, the letter that tells of hopes and doubts and fears and little heart secrets generally, that needs to undergo a sort of reform.

There is always somebody handy to tell you what is "good form" in stationery, and one should really be careful to use nice paper and good ink, but whether you have in your desk just the finest and properly tinted paper or the cheapest and plainest, do not, do not, I beg of you, put down in cold black and white - or pale blue and violet - a lot of foolishness that you might one day regret. It would be worse than folly, it would be unkind to your friends and those who love you, to ask that you make your letters coldly practical, with every word weighed in the balance. This would not make your letters seem part of your very self, and this is what they should seem. But it is always well to remember that a letter is more telltale than anything you could possibly say in conversation. There are men and women who have written imitations of Dodd's Kidney Pills are legion. The box is imitated, the outside coating and shape of the pills are imitated and the name - Dodd's Kidney Pills is imitated. Imitations are dangerous. There is only one DODD'S. Dodd's is the original. Dodd's is the name to be careful about - letters over which they exclaimed in a few years, "I never could have been foolish enough to write like that!" I am going to ask particularly of the young and enthusiastic girl that she refrain from writing those "gushing" letters that she somehow drops so naturally into penning. I want to remind her that many times she is inclined to grow confidential on paper when she would never think of being so if she stood face to face with that same acquaintance to whom her confidential letter is sent.

Letters travel so cheaply and quickly nowadays that we who send them and those who receive them regard them too lightly. When the post was slower and more expensive, letters were written with more care, and we all know how full of interest and valuable information many of the old time letters are today. When away on your vacation, write bright and newsy letters to your best friends, but above all things refrain from unkindly criticising those you have met. Remember that this world is not such a big place after all. People who are widely separated in summer time may be brought close together in winter time. Honor only a few with your confidence. You may write bright letters to all your circle of acquaintances, and, after all, those things which concern you individually and closely are often only tiresome to other folks.

Haven't you at one time or another posted a letter and then wished you had not done so? It is homely advice, but good, to "write a letter and sleep on it over night." A letter, no matter who has penned it to you, should be received as a confidential matter, to be taken care of and not subjected to the comment and criticism of others. When it was written, there was doubtless no other thought concerning it in the mind of the sender than that your eyes alone would scan it. Do you think that the "love letters of the great" would be spread out for curious eyes if the "great" themselves could speak? I think not. The "love letters of the great" may be interesting. It is often so charming to know that a very wise and stern man was, after all, so very human as to write almost silly letters to the object of his adoration, but he thought not of the prying eyes that in after years might twinkle over his little romance, no matter how beautiful and soulful it was.

Let us take good care of the letters of our friends. It is an easy enough matter to put those precious ones that we would not part with for worlds in a little bunch all to themselves and through all the years that we live remember they were sent to you or me alone. After one has left all the affairs of this world behind - but that is another story. It is not ourselves then, but others who are responsible for giving to the public these sacred documents, for isn't the story of one heart tells to another sacred? There is such a charm about an old love letter. Have you ever chanced to find one tucked away in the corner of an unused trunk or in a heap of rubbish in an attic corner? Maybe the John who wrote it and the Priscilla who read it are entirely unknown to you, but at once your fancy begins to paint them as they must have been. Your eyes grow dim as you read the sentimental little verse that follows a lot of endearing terms. But put the little letter back in its hiding place, if you do not care to tear it up, for John only made those vows of eternal devotion to Priscilla. Maybe - who knows! - they may have proved eternal. Maybe that Priscilla, first a bonny sweetheart and then a bonny bride, lived to be a happy wife and devoted mother. Maybe one day as the sun went low she held John's hand and promised to greet him when he should come to her in the far beyond. All these things the little old love letter hints at. - Margaret Haun in St. Louis Republic.

Costly Lessons. "What's that there young man's business?" asked Mr. Parvenu. "He's a tutor, I believe," replied his wife. "What does he teach?" "One of them old sciences, I s'pose," answered Mrs. Parvenu. "I ain't just sure what it is, but last night Maybelle told me he was giving her some lessons in osculation." "Well, I s'pose she's got to be educated," returned the old man. "I only hope he won't charge no fancy price for his lessons." - Chicago Post.

Steadfast Nature. "I have seen Brother Bruggetts grow from a poor young man to a middle aged millionaire," said the aged minister, "and it has not changed him one bit. When he first entered my church, he established the habit of putting a quarter in the plate every Sunday, and though he has since grown rich, he puts in his 25 cents." - Indianapolis Journal.

Why He Was Wakeful. "Didn't sleep a wink last night," said the dyspeptic. "Overwork?" "No; I heard one of those songs about slumber sweetly, sweet dreams be thine, and the confounded tune kept running through my head all night!" - Washington Star.
