P.E.I. Federation

It was the aim to have the children glowing with mental health as they do with physical health.

During the afternoon some excellent encouraging reports were presented for consideration of the meeting. Mrs. Nell A. Matheson, Southport, told of a co-operative project being carried out in her community by the Home and School Association and the Women's Institute. It had been successfully carried out in four centres with pleasing results. She felt that in time the groups would be able to work out a satisfactory program.

Reports Presented

Mrs. Basil MacDonald, Tracadie Cross, gave a thorough report on the meeting of the National Home and School Association which she attended in Saskatoon. Miss Estelle Bonness, general secretary of the P. E. I. Teachers Federation gave an excellent report dealing with teacher recruitment. She suggested that the main project of the Home and School Association should be to work in close co-operation with the Teachers Federation to improve public opinion of teachers.

At the conclusion of her report a motion was made that teacher recruitment be strongly emphasized for the coming year and that the Teachers Federation should work out the program outlines to be taken up for study and discussion in local Home and School Association meetings.

Miss Hazel Hunter spoke about physically handicapped children with particular reference to those in the cerebral palsy group. This was followed by a talk by Mr. Jack Lightizer on the work of the Parents Council for mentally retarded children. Both were thought provoking and brought home to the gathering the need for aid by these two classes of youngsters.

The chair was briefly taken by Mr. Kenneth Parker, chairman of the nominating committee, who presented the new slate of officers to the convention.

Evening Program

In the evening Mrs. MacDonald presided and introduced the platform guests. They included Mrs. Duckworth, Hon. Keir Clark, Minister of Education, Dr. Lloyd Shaw, Deputy Minister and Director of Education, Professor J. H. Blain, Dr. A. A. MacVicar, Provincial Psychiatrist, Mrs. Basil MacDonald and Rev. L. Murray. The chairman called on Dr. Shaw to introduce Mrs. Duckworth. In doing so the Director of Education work was still in place as a force for good. He said it had not come earlier as he felt it would be more effective if it came in its own time because it was not something which could be forced. After a few brief remarks Mrs. Duckworth then told the audience that the larger part of the evening would be devoted to a short play followed by group discussion. Dr. MacVicar described the purpose of the play as one intended to demonstrate different methods of handling and bringing up children.

Taking the parts of the three mothers were Mrs. Sterling Giddings, Mrs. Fulton Coffin and Mrs. Charles Willet. The latter played the part of a neurotic mother who did everything "by the book" and as a result almost wrecked her home through continual arguments with her husband and succeeded in having a nervous child. Mrs. Coffin was the over-strict type who insisted that children "had to learn early who was the boss."

Excellent Acting

Mrs. Giddings was the normal mother who gave love and understanding (and spanking) when needed and as a result had three children who loved their home and their parents. Her performance was excellent as she brought her vast store of stage experience to the part. Her fellow actresses also gave top performances and made their roles thoroughly believable.

At the conclusion of the play the audience broke into small groups where they discussed the play and its psychological implications. After 15 minutes Mrs. Duckworth took over as chairman and asked the various groups for their opinions. It was noticeable that all agreed that the sympathetic understanding type of mother would obtain far better results with her children. But it was also noted that the mother played by Mrs. Giddings had three children while the others had only one.

They thought it was a mistake on a mother's part to be always threatening a child with punishment of the fear of having his father told of his actions. One speaker asked what would happen to the two other boys when they got to school age if they were brought up in homes which offered only tyranny or neuroticism.

Effective Method

In general the audience felt that this play method was an excellent way of bringing home to parents the problems faced by others.

Dr. MacVicar said that husbands had an important part to play in bringing up the children and remarked that from the psychiatric point of view understanding and happiness in the home have an important place. He said there was no such thing as a normal person, there were only average people and he said that children quickly recognized the type to which their mother belonged and reacted accordingly.

Hon. Keir Clark expressed the thanks of all to the cast of the play. He said that Home and School Associations were already making a deep impression on the educational life of the Province as liaison between the school and the home. He expressed his appreciation to Mrs. Duckworth for coming here to take charge of the program last night.

Following the afternoon session the new executive held a dinner meeting with Mrs. Duckworth at The Charlottetown.

Atlantic Trip Possible Cause Of Bone Disease

PARIS. (Reuters)—Alain Bombard, 29, who crossed the Atlantic alone in a rubber dinghy to prove that shipwrecked sailors could survive on a diet of fish and seawater, is seriously ill with a bone disease.

Doctors said Tuesday the bearded medical student, still stooped and haggard from his 55-day ordeal two years ago, must undergo an operation to graft bone from his leg on to his spine, which can no longer support the weight of his body.

Cause of Bombard's illness may be due to lack of calcium during his Atlantic crossing on the 18-foot Heretic, which reduced his weight by about 45 pounds.

Bombard, resting at his mother's home near Vendome in western France, said: "I still have faith in my fish and seawater diet."

French Planes Blast Two Rebel Bases

HANOI (AP)—French planes burned and blasted two Vietminh guerrilla bases only seven miles east of Hanoi Tuesday. Then French tanks and infantry, routing through the smoking ruins, killed about 110 rebels who had survived the bombardment.

The blow demolished two clay and thatch villages near Senho which the Vietminh had been using as springboards for raids on the nearby railway and highway between this French headquarters city and the port of Haiphong.

About 1,000 guerrillas had been based in the villages.

The attack was part of an operation by French planes, tanks and infantry to smash all rebel bases near Hanoi. With those immediately south and east eliminated, the French now are hitting to the north and west.

Five Viet Namese militia posts beat off rebel assaults along the Red River 25 miles northwest of Hanoi, killing 30 Vietminh.
