ALMONT WILKES, 2.31 1/2

The well known stallion, "Almont Wilkes" by "Hernando," 2.37 1-2, dam "Olive Wilkes," 2.39 1-4, dam of "Gracie Wilkes," 2.39 and "Almont Wilkes," 2.31 1-2, by Geo. Wilkes, jr., will stand the season of 1898 at Nicholson's Tramping Stables, Grafton St., opp. Court House, Ch'town.

Almont Wilkes is a big, stylish, carriage horse; he stands over 16 hands high and weighs 1200 lbs. He is the sire of Montrose, 2.20 3-4, and Westle Wilkes, 2.39 1-4. Montrose was the horse that put up such a gallant fight in the free-for-all at Ch'town track last fall, and there is no doubt that only for the concerted action of the other drivers, he would have won with ease. He trotted 13 heats, winning 4 first places and 5 seconds.

Westle Wilkes started in the 2.40 class at Summerside last fall, a green horse right off the pasture, getting a mark of 2.39 1-4 in a field of seasoned campaigners, and his owner expects him to get a mark of 2.23 this year. This proves that Almont Wilkes sires speed of a high order, and being a remarkable good looker, has always been a prize-winner in the show ring even when up against the best in the land.

IN WASHINGTON'S POCKETS.

Search Showed First President Did Not Use Gum or Cigarettes.

A man who had returned from a post which he held in a foreign country told a reporter an amusing story of something which occurred several years ago at the National museum. The gentleman in question was connected with the museum unofficially. He spent much time there, assisting to arrange the different exhibits. In this capacity he had a key which admitted him to most of the cases where the relics, etc., were kept. He knew the curators at the museum and enjoyed their full confidence. He said:

"One afternoon after the museum had been closed I was there with two or three of the other men connected with the place. I do not know just how the thing started, but we jokingly proposed to search the pockets of the clothes of George Washington, which were on exhibition. We had been arranging them or looking at them, I think, which suggested this:

"Let's see if the old gentleman left any money in his clothes, or what he was in the habit of carrying about with him," one of us said, and the idea was carried out.

"There was nothing in any of the pockets but one. In the bottom of this, when it was turned inside out, was some brown, powdery substance, which had a most pungent smell. There was considerable of this, which was either tobacco or snuff, showing that the Father of His Country was most likely addicted to the use of it. I put it in a piece of paper and kept it carefully.

"The funniest part of it was that when I showed it to my little son on returning home he berated me roundly for taking part in a proceeding which he characterized as sacrilege in daring to violate the garments of so noted a person by putting my hands in his pocket.

"It was much better to do it after he was dead, my boy, than to do the pick-pocket act while he was living," I declared. "It proved conclusively to me that the immortal George did not possess the chewing gum or cigarette habit. If he smoked tobacco, he used it in a pipe. There was nothing of a dude about him."—Washington Star.

TOLD BY THE CIRCUS MAN.

The Big Giraffe's Usefulness In Carrying a Torch For the Calliope Player.

"In all night parades," said the old circus man, "we used to have a big 18 foot giraffe carry a torch, and there wasn't anything in the whole procession that attracted more attention. We had a torch made specially for him, with an extra long handle with a grip piece about midway of its length, which the giraffe held in his mouth. The handle rose six or eight feet above the giraffe's head, so that he carried the big torch about 25 feet above the ground. The lower end of the handle was steadied by means of a strap made fast to it and buckled around the giraffe's neck.

"We had at that time a steam calliope, one of the first ever carried in a circus. I don't know but what it was the very first, and we used to have the giraffe, carrying the torch, march beside the calliope. You've seen men and boys marching alongside the band at night carrying torches for the musicians to see their notes by? Well, we had the giraffe march beside the calliope to light the music for the calliope player. In order to make the calliope outfit fit the giraffe we had a wagon built with a broad wheel base, so that we could safely carry the platform that the calliope stood on up high, but it looked as though we had the giraffe carry the torch for the player because that was the only way we could get the light up to him.

"You know, the calliope in those days, used to get the people tremendous. The calliope itself was a great card, but when you come to see the professor sitting up there on the platform playing away on the keyboard, with his gaze fixed on the music in front of him and every now and then turning over a leaf and then pounding down on the keys again so as not to lose the time, while all the while the giraffe was marching solemnly alongside holding the torch as near as he could, so that the professor could see the music—un-ah! Well, the people used to just go wild over it, and I'm not so certain myself but what it was the greatest thing we ever taught the giraffe to do."—New York Sun.

The "Smartest Dog."

John N. Conover, the liveryman, has perhaps the most intelligent dog in all this country. He is a shepherd and is valued very highly by his owner. George Coffey went out home with Mr. Conover one day, and upon his return related the following to a representative of The News: "Well, sir, John Conover has got the smartest dog I ever saw, and if he was mine I wouldn't take $100 for him. I was out at John's today, and it was raining. The dog was lying by the stove, and John said to him, calling him by name: 'This fire is about out. Go and get a stick of wood.' The dog sprang up, went hastily to the wood-house and returned with a stick in his mouth. Mr. Conover then remarked, 'Go up stairs and get my old hat.' The summons was obeyed, and in two minutes Mr. Conover was presented with his hat, but it was not the one he wanted, so he told the dog to take it back and bring another one, describing it, and this time no mistake was made. He then said to the dog: 'It is raining. Go and see that the cattle are in the field convenient to the barn.' The dog started with a yelp, and it was not long until he came in, satisfying his master that his orders had been obeyed."—Columbia (Ky.) News.
