GEORGETOWN SUPREME COURT

Owing to the fact that there are no Jury Cases to be tried at the forthcoming Sittings of the Supreme Court to be held at Georgetown commencing Tuesday, July 17th, members of the Grand and Petit Jury who have been notified to attend on that date are hereby notified that their attendance in Georgetown will not be required. J. O. C. CAMPBELL, Deputy Attorney-General.

where death or grievous bodily harm is not proven to be caused thereby; driving in a manner dangerous to the public would involve the lesser kind of negligence, but would be applicable irrespective of the actual bodily results.

Island Court Decisions

The Attorney General said that the Court must use as a guide the decision of the Supreme Court here in the question of dangerous driving, rather than decisions reached by courts elsewhere.

He said that in this trial there were certain incontrovertible facts. He related how the truck had stopped, and followed the course of events as they happened the night of April 14. Mr. Darby then discussed the actions of the accused and stated that after rounding Keppoch Road corner he had slowed down when he came to the bad bump and was then driving about 12 or 15 miles per hour. After passing the bump he picked up speed to 30 or 35. He had stated he did not see the truck until just before he applied the brakes.

Allowing for the natural period of reaction, Mr. Darby said he should still see the truck at a distance of at least 75 feet. At that time he had two alternatives: he could pass the truck to the left, which was the normal thing to do, or he could stop. If the way to the left were open he should have taken it as that would be the normal operation when passing whether the other vehicle was in motion or stopped.

The Court must first decide if the way were open. The defendant had said he saw cars coming towards him but he cannot remember of any passing while he was approaching the truck. Mrs. Sellar "somewhat" confirmed this, she said, but thought they were two very uncertain witnesses. "The evidence indicates there was no approaching traffic to impede passing to the left."

He quoted the testimony of several witnesses who had said they saw no cars. Of course, he added, that if the Court had any doubt about the way to the left being open the accused should be given the benefit. He referred to the visibility, the lookout kept by the defendant and the speed of the car as three important factors in reaching a decision. He asked "Could he, or should he have seen the truck at a such greater distance? If he did and still proceeded it was potentially dangerous, and was actually dangerous."

Mr. Darby went on to say that other witnesses had seen the truck at much greater distances and mentioned Gordon Gay who while working further up the road saw the truck at a distance of 750 feet while Judge Tweedy had not seen it at 425 feet. He mentioned that most people drive looking approximately 100 yards ahead of their vehicle, not directly at the road in front.

He maintained that the defendant was grossly negligent in the operation of the car that night.

Crown Arguments

Summing up for the Crown Attorney General Darby first told the Court of the embarrassing position in which he was placed by virtue of having to prosecute a member of the judiciary. Since the Grand Jury had brought in a true bill he had no choice in the matter because "I have a duty to perform."

He said the Criminal Code section under which the charge was laid created an independent and distinct offence of which negligence is not an element. He said the question of moral turpitude did not enter into the case at all. Mr. Darby quoted the case of Burns vs. The King, a decision on appeal to the Supreme Court of this province in which Chief Justice Campbell read the majority opinion with Mr. Justice Arsenault dissenting. The case involved an appeal from a conviction for a highway fatality. In his opinion the Chief Justice said: "Recklessly" and "In a manner dangerous to the public" are not intended as alternative ways of describing the same offence. Driving recklessly would be driving with a gross and criminal disregard of the lives and safety of others, and would therefore be appropriate to cases
