Nelson's Trafalgar Victory To Be Marked By Naval Ball

The ballroom of HMCS Queen Charlotte will be the scene of the annual Trafalgar Day Ball Friday evening.

The ball is held yearly to commemorate Admiral Horatio Nelson's most famous victory fought Oct. 21, 1805. As a result of this battle the naval power of France and Spain under Napoleon which had been threatening Britain for many years was finally overcome.

Friday night's ball is sponsored by the Naval Officers Association of Canada and it will be attended by many senior civil and service dignitaries.

Although Admiral Nelson was killed during the battle of Trafalgar his memory will always stay fresh, as will that of his ship HMCS Victory, which has lain at Portmouth ever since.

still visible the scars in the stone around these slits where the snipers were in turn fired at. Even Nelson himself did not escape unscathed, a rifle bullet took a chip out of the bridge of his nose.

Although Nelson is usually given the rank of admiral, this is in fact incorrect. He never did attain the rank of full admiral. He had achieved fame before Trafalgar and was honoured by his country for his victories by being made a Knight of the Bath, and by being created a Viscount, but he was never promoted to Admiral because at that time it was just not possible. Promotion in flag rank was only by seniority and, as they had no retirement age in those days, it was literally a case of waiting for dead men's shoes.

Horatio Nelson joined the Navy at the age of 12 and he had extremely rapid promotions until he became a captain at the age of 20. This was phenomenal even in those days, but there he remained for a further 18 years, until a vacancy occurred in flag rank.

At the time of his death at Trafalgar, at the age of 47, his rank was vice-admiral of the white.

Had he lived, it has since been worked out that, for vacancies to have occurred for him to obtain promotion, he would eventually have become an admiral at the ripe old age of 86.

Preparations For Youth Day Underway In High Schools

Preparations for civic youth day will swing into high gear when elections for "mayor" and "city councillors" take place on November 6, with the first council meeting to follow one week later.

In order to circumvent certain technicalities involved in the election of mayor a coin was tossed to see which school would have the honour. Birchwood high school won the toss, so the chief magistrate will be elected from that school.

The deputy mayor, who will be a girl, will be chosen from Quea Charlotte. Each succeeding year, the choice of mayor will be alternated between the two schools.

Public relations chairman in the city council H.E. Hyndman, said today that School Superintendent K.A. Parker and Rotary youth chairman, Brian Cudmore are co-operating fully to make the day one to be remembered by both pupils and parents alike.

After the mayor and five councillors from each school are elected they will attend on Nov. 9 a regular meeting of the city council where each committee chairman will be taken under the wing of a regular councillor.
