ELECTRIC GLOSS

FOR cleaning Solid Silver, Nickel, Brass, Copper and Plate Glass. Quick! Sure!
Permanent! No dirt, no trouble, no labor.
Being entirely free from grit and acids, it cannot injure the most finely burnished surface. It is the only preparation ever produced that will polish brass or copper without the use of acid. Nothing approaches it for removing grease and finger marks from Brass, Copper, Glass, etc.; while for cleaning Nickel or Stoves it is especially useful.
Retail price, 25 cents per bottle.
MICA WASH.—This wash is the only thing of the kind ever invented. A stove may be as handsome as a jewel and shine like ebony; but smoked mica lights will spoil it all. Day by day mica becomes scarcer and higher in price, and an article that will clean and preserve it is valuable to all concerned.
Try this wash once, and you will always use it. Retail price, 25 cents per bottle.
The above household necessities are manufactured by The Electric Gloss Co., Philadelphia U. S. A., and sold by every respectable Drug

CHAPTER XV.

THE TWO BED-CHAMBERS.

HETTY and Dinah both slept in the second story, in rooms adjoining each other, meagerly-furnished rooms, with no blinds to shut out the light, which was now beginning to gather new strength from the rising of the moon—more than enough strength to enable Hetty to move about and undress with perfect comfort. She could see quite well the pegs in the old painted linen-press on which she hung her hat and gown; she could see the head of every pin on her red cloth pin-cushion; she could see a reflection of herself in the old-fashioned looking-glass, quite as distinct as was needful, considering that she had only to brush her hair and put on her night cap. A queer old looking-glass! Hetty got into an ill-temper with it almost every time she dressed. It had been considered a handsome glass in its day, and had probably been brought into the Poyser family a quarter of a century before, at a sale of genteel household furniture. Even now an auctioneer could say something for it; it had a great deal of tarnished gilding about it; it had a firm mahogany base, well supplied with drawers, which opened with a decided jerk, and sent the contents leaping out from the farthest corners, without giving you the trouble of reaching them; above all, it had a brass candle socket on each side, which would give it an aristocratic air to the very last. But Hetty objected to it because it had numerous dim blotches sprinkled over the mirror, which no rubbing would remove, and because, instead of swinging backward and forward, it was fixed in an upright position, so that she could only get one good view of her head and neck, and that was to be had only by sitting down on a low chair before her dressing-table. And the dressing-table was no dressing-table at all, but a small old chest of drawers, the most awkward thing in the world to sit down before, for the big brass handles quite hurt her knees, and she couldn't get near the glass at all comfortably. But devout worshippers never allow inconveniences to prevent them from performing their religious rites, and Hetty this evening was more bent on her peculiar form of worship than usual.

Having taken off her gown and white kerchief, she drew a key from the large pocket that hung outside her petticoat, and unlocking one of the lower drawers in the chest, reached from it two short bits of wax candle—secretly bought at Treddleston—and stuck them in the two brass sockets.
Then she drew forth a bundle of matches, and lighted the candles; and last of all, small, red-framed, shilling looking glass, without blotches. It was into this small glass that she chose to look first after seating herself. She looked into it, smiling, and turning her head on one side for a minute, then laid it down and took out her brush and comb from an upper drawer, and make herself look like that picture of a lady in Miss Lydia Donnithorne's dressing-room. It was soon done, and the dark hyacinthine curves fell on her neck. It was not heavy, massive, merely rippling hair, but soft and silken, running at every opportunity into delicate rings. But she pushed it all backward to look like the picture, and from a dark curtain, throwing into relief her round white neck. Then she put down her brush and comb and looked at herself, folding her arms before her, still like the picture. Even the old mottled glass couldn't help sending back a lovely image, none the less lovely because Hetty's stays were not of white satin—such as I feel sure heroines must generally wear—but of a dark greenish cotton texture.

Oh yes! she was very pretty; Captain Donnithorne thought so. Prettier than anybody about Hayslope—prettier than any of the ladies she had ever seen visiting at the Chase; indeed it seemed fine ladies were rather old and ugly—not prettier than Miss Bacon, the miller's daughter, who was called the beauty of Treddleston.
And Hetty looked at herself to-night with quite a different sensation from what she had ever felt before; there was an invisible spectator whose eyes rested on her like morning on the flowers. His soft voice was saying over and over again those pretty things she had heard in the wood; his arm was around her, and the delicate rose scent of his hair was with her still.
The vainest woman is never thoroughly conscious of her own beauty till she is loved by the man who sets her own passion vibrating in return.

But Hetty seemed to have made up her mind that something was wanting, for she got up and reached an old black lace scarf out of the linen-press, and a pair of large earrings out of the sacred drawer from which she had taken her candle. It was an old, old scarf, full of rents, but it would make a becoming border round her shoulders, and set off the whiteness of her upper arms. And she would take out the little earrings she had in her ears—oh, how her aunt had scolded her for having her ears bored! and put in those large ones; they were but colored glass and gilding, but, if you didn't know what they were made of, they looked just as well as what the ladies wore. And so she sat down again, with the large earrings in her ears, and the black lace scarf adjusted round her shoulders. She looked down at her arms; no arms could be prettier down to a little way below the elbow—they were white and plump, and dimpled to match her cheeks; but toward the wrist she thought with vexation that they were coarsened by butter-making, and other work that ladies never did.

Captain Donnithorne couldn't like her to go on doing work; he would like to see her in nice clothes, and thin shoes and white stockings, perhaps with silk cloaks to them; for he must love her very much—no one else had ever put his arm round her and kissed her in that way. He would want to

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Tribute to Teachers.

Sir,—While we see monuments erected to the memory of great statesmen and mighty warriors, and songs of thrilling and heart-stirring notes commemorating of some great battle or event, yet who ever saw anything done or heard anything said or sung in memory of the man who, to-day, as well as in ages past, is the lever, so to speak, that elevates his fellow-man.

I refer, Mr. Editor, to the public school teacher, whose life is spent in the thankless but noblest of all secular callings—that of teaching the young idea how to shoot, and fitting his pupils how to become useful and noble citizens of this subnary sphere.

The above thoughts, Mr. Editor, came forcibly to my mind on the 24th inst., while present at the semi-annual examination of Kingsboro School, East Point, whose teacher is Mr. Roland H. McNeill, of New Perth, a man that need not be ashamed of his work. I am sure that the parents present on that occasion must have felt a pardonable pride in the way and manner in which their little ones (for I noticed they were nearly all small children) acquitted themselves on that occasion. The readiness with which they answered the questions in the various branches taught, and the discipline shown, was to me at least something worthy of admiration.

In conclusion I would say, let the competent teacher, whoever he may be, have that sympathy and aid which he so very much needs in his honorable but arduous calling.

A TRUSTEE.

Breadalbane Notes.

The fall trade in general was brisk, considering that quotations were but slightly above zero with a corresponding depression on the countenance of the average farmer.
In addition to our old time shippers, we had a visit from a St. John buyer, who kept competition above the average during his stay.

Our school controversy seems to have spent its fury, and the antagonists are betaking themselves to more lucrative employments.

The mists of the political war cloud seem to be slowly taking their departure for more congenial climes, closely presented by a reaction of disappointment as the inevitable consequence of too high atting hopes.

Mr. S. Matheson's boot and shoe factory is in full blast, and, in spite of keen competition, is doing a thriving business.

The youth of the village were lately treated to a free ball at the hospitable residence of Mr. Peter Dunn. Suitable speeches were delivered by Mr. A. Ross and Mr. C. Taper. The music was played on the Highland bagpipes by Currie Murdoch, and was well received. It is needless to remark that all present spent an enjoyable evening.
