The Thorpe Affair

By Phillip Lealy

"This is Terry. I'm still on the trail of some hot clues in the Thorpe extermination. Say, John is there any word about the cops picking up this guy Stanton yet?"

"No, there isn't. And what stopping you from calling up and telling us Stanton took a shot at you? You have to wait till we get it from headquarters, don't you? Don't forget you get your cheques from us. And also, how about the dope on these hot clues you've been trailing all this time? The story'll be dead by the time you decide to find something."

"I didn't have time to call you when I came to. And if I break the dope on this angle now I'll spoil the whole yarn. Play ball, will you? Any word of the cops picking up that mystery girl yet?"

"Not yet. It's taking those dicks longer to find a dame than it has any one of them for years. And she's supposed to be pretty slick too. The boys are slipping. They're getting old."

"Yeah. Tell Bledsoe to expect to replate almost any time now. How'd you like a big scoop?"

"The bigger the better. And the more dirt you scoop up with it the better that'll be too. But make it before the next presidential election, or it might have to take page two."

Terry was not certain whether to sigh from relief or anxiety. She was not in the hands of the police—but that seemed to indicate that she had fled or that she was being held somewhere. If she had run out she was safe—but he didn't care if she was, then. But if it was the other possibility...

He had finally managed to decide on a course of action as his methodical line of thought returned. He drove to Kay's hotel, parked his car about a block away and walked around to the back.

Grasping firmly onto the rain-spout, he clambered up, gripping with his hands and knees, until he could reach the fire escape. From there he climbed up cautiously, being careful not to expose himself as he passed unshaded windows, to the fourth floor. He tried a window, found it unlocked, and pushed it up noiselessly. A careful glance up and down the corridor showed it to be deserted, so he walked on the balls of his feet until he reached a door that bore a brass plate on which were the figures 419.

The door was locked. Pulling out a ring of skeleton keys, Terry tried three before one worked and he pushed his way into the room. This wasn't legal, but he had stopped having compunctions about the law when he had learned that Kay was in danger.

The shades were drawn, so the rooms were dark. He groped along the wall for the light switch and flipped it. The living room was in apparent order, its homey furniture arranged systematically. But he caught sight of a corner of the carpet turned up, and one of the pillows on the sofa was awry.

Going into the bedroom, he switched on the light and made a visual search. Nothing seemed out of place. He opened the closet and smiled wryly at the quantity and variety of women's clothes it contained. He doubted that there was room for another garment. On the or, in a corner, were two suitcases. He patted these out, found that there was a coat of dust on each. Both were empty.

The drawers of the dresser were well-filled and orderly. He couldn't think of anything belonging there that was absent. In the bathroom he found that even the toothbrush and paste were in their places.

It was evident that she hadn't fled, no one, especially a woman, would run away without taking any personal things. That meant that she had been taken by force.

His jaw set hard as he considered this. The turned corner of the rug, the slightly awry sofa cushion, indicated possibilities of a struggle. There was nothing to lead him to believe she was not spirited away. That meant that she was a captive, in imminent danger of violent harm. And where could she be? Only vague hunches, bare possibilities, suggested themselves to him. The chances are one in a thousand that he could find her by searching in the city and its vicinity. But until there was no chance, he'd search.

MRS. CHARLES DUNSFORD

Saturday, June 23rd, 1951, marked the passing of one of South Melville's oldest and most beloved residents. Born at Crapaud in the year 1863, she was the daughter of the late Joseph and Pheobe MacDonald. During the past number of years she suffered greatly from arthritis, but she was seldom known to complain and bore all her suffering with a true Christian spirit.

She was able to be about her usual activities until June 5th when she suffered a fall from which she did not recover.

During her short illness she was faithfully visited by her pastor the Rev. Mr. Armstrong of St. John's Anglican Church at Crapaud in which she was a life-long member, and by the Rev. Mr. Woolfrey of Hampton United Church.

Mrs. Dunsford was never happier than when entertaining friends and neighbors and her kindness and hospitality will long be remembered by all those who knew her. During her earlier years, being a capable nurse, she was always ready and willing to lend a helping hand in the sick rooms of her friends and neighbors.

She leaves to mourn her loss five daughters and three sons, May (Mrs. L. May Ferguson) South Melville; Minnie (Mrs. Willard Lank) West Royalty; Gladys (Mrs. John Nicholson) Crapaud; Hilda (Mrs. Brent Howatt) Central Royalty; and Ruth (Mrs. John Simmons) Crapaud and Will Gordon, South Melville and Percy, Westwood, Mass.

The funeral was held from her late residence on June 25th, and was conducted both at her home and at the grave by the Rev. Mr. Armstrong, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Woolfrey. Hymns sung were, "The 23rd Psalm" and "All The Way My Saviour Leads Me." The pall-bearers were Harry Dunsford, Joseph Dunsford, Wilmar MacDonald, Frank MacDonald, John Dixon and Emmett Gorman.

Card Of Thanks

The family of the late Mrs. Charles Dunsford wish to thank their friends and neighbors, also Miss Lolita MacVittie, R.N., of Crapaud, and all those who sent flowers, cards and messages of sympathy during their sad bereavement.

Scout News and Notices

Sir Ian Solton, President of the Scottish Boy Scout Council, and the Hon. Ray Lawson, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, were given a rousing welcome by 538 Rover Scouts from Canada, the U. S. A. and Cuba, at the First Canadian Rover Moot at Blue Springs Scout Reserve near Acton, Ontario during the Labour Day weekend.

You should have been at the Cornhill last Friday evening, when thirty Cubs, members of the Royal and Sixth Canadian Packs, met to renew old and new camp friendships at East Royalty. As the harvest moon shone down on the briskly burning campfire, thirty husky voices, toned down by the "pleasing baritone" of their leader Mr. Frank Costello, split the air with the strains of their favorite camp songs. There was lots of corn for everyone and believe me, the boys did full justice to it. Leaders present were Misses Anne Trainor, Leah McMahon,

Six Soldiers From Korea Under Arrest

VANCOUVER, Sept. 25—(CP)—Six soldiers under arrest on criminal charges, including the three involved in manslaughter and attempted rape charges before an army court-martial, arrived Sunday in Vancouver by air from Tokyo. They will leave today for an eastern prison.

In the group was Pte. Alan Roy Montgomery Davis, 24, of Vancouver. He, like the other two jointly charged following death of a Korean civilian, had a charge of murder reduced by the army court, and was sentenced to 18 months in prison.

Pte. Glen Roland Blank, 27, Winnipeg, was convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Pte. Donald Michael Gibson, 21, Ottawa, was convicted of attempted rape and being in an army and sentenced to two years less one day.

Arrival of the plane was at first cloaked in close military secrecy.

At Ottawa, a spokesman at army headquarters said details of the charges against the other three soldiers were not immediately available. However, he added that they were involved in "serious charges" unconnected with the manslaughter and rape charges.

Barbara Coyle, Frank Costello, and the popular camp cook, Miss Irma Holmes. We were very glad to have, as our distinguished visitors, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Driscoll, Miss Shirlee McNally, Mr. Ted Strain and Mr. Harry Pineau. Following campfire, a presentation of prizes was made to those who had merited them at Camp Buchan. (The list was published in last week's paper).

We wish to thank Ted for his kind donation of marshmallows, which, when roasted over the campfire, brought to a close a wonderful evening of "Good Cubbing".
