Directed Election Campaign Is Launched In Soviet Union

MOSCOW (AP)—From Vladivostok to Vilna, the world's most tightly organized election campaign has begun.

It will come to a climax March 18 when a majority of Soviet citizens, still shielded from chill winds by felt boots and padded jackets, will elect a new Supreme Soviet (parliament).

The election will be preceded by vast columns of oratory but there will be no campaigning in the Western sense. Not one of 1,300-odd candidates will have an opponent.

At the moment, the various candidates have opponents, but this lasts only about another week. By that time the "nominating" of candidates will be ended at collective farms and factories, and the Communist party will choose the one person who is to run from a particular district.

So far each district has generally nominated one prominent person such as Premier Khrushchev or cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin and then several lesser persons.

One hundred and thirty-six districts have announced they want Khrushchev as a candidate but he will run from only one district. Other districts will settle for candidates of lesser status.

The ballot bears the name of only one candidate. Voters do one of two things: they fold the ballot and drop it in the ballot box, which would be a vote for a candidate; or write in the name of another person.

Voting booths are provided but it is considered patriotic for a voter to handle his ballot in full view of election officials. Most ballots, generally about 98 or 99 per cent, are simply folded and dropped into the box.

Now that the candidate is safely elected, what are his duties?

Once or twice a year he gets a trip to Moscow where he will listen to government and party speeches for several days. He will vote on such things as the budget and economic plans. So far no member of the Supreme Soviet has voted against any proposal.

The bidding:
 South West North East
 Pass Pass 1♣ 1♥
 1♠ 2♥ 3♠ 3♣
 Pass 3♥ 3♠

This hand was played in a four-table team match. The caliber of the players was very high, but what happened at the four tables cannot be used to substantiate the statement.

At the first table, the bidding went as shown. Whether South should have passed three clubs or whether North should have bid somewhat differently is perhaps debatable.

But they were given another life when West, refusing to give up, bid three hearts and gave North a chance to show belated spade support. However, South decided he had had enough and three spades became the final contract. West led a heart and South wound up making ten tricks.

At the second table, North, an imaginative player, decided to open the bidding third-hand with a spade. When South responded three spades, North lost courage and passed. East led a club and North also made ten tricks, equaling the score at the previous table.

At the third table, this was the bidding:

South West North East
 Pass Pass 1NT Pass
 2♣ Pass 3♠ Pass
 3♠ Pass 4♠

The North at this table decided to open with a notrump. Obviously, his imagination was also working overtime. However, he did not weaken in the stretch. When his partner, using the Stayman convention, responded two clubs, he raised to three clubs, denying a four-card major suit, but he then carried on to game after South had shown a five-card suit by bidding three spades.

This worked out all right when West led a spade—and South breezed home with 13 tricks.

At the fourth table, North opened the bidding with four clubs and everybody passed. East led the queen of diamonds and North made 13 tricks.

Analysis reveals that the four North players each took a different view in choosing his opening bid. Peculiarly enough, the proper contract of four spades was reached only at the table where North opened the bidding with a notrump.
