

Red Dogs And Rabbit Complete Space Jaunt

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia announced Monday night they have shot two dogs, a rabbit and recording instruments into space in a rocket and brought them back safely. The animals and instruments weighed more than two tons.

The announcement did not say how high or how far the rocket travelled. It gave "no size or weight of the propelling rocket other than to say it was an intermediate-range missile. But the Russians said much valuable data was collected on conditions in space.

For one of the dogs, Otzavnaya (Courageous), it was the third trip into space, the official Tass news agency reported. The name of the other dog is Snezhinka (Snowflake). The rabbit was not named.

ANIMALS WELL

The animals are quite well after their trip, Tass said. The rocket that carried them was sent aloft at 6:40 a.m. Moscow time July 2 (12:40 a.m. ADT July 1).

The Russians described it as a "single-stage geophysical ballistic intermediate range rocket."

An announcement said: "Repeated ascents made by the same animals have made it possible to obtain data about the adaptability of animals to flights in rockets. New data on the behavior of animals under conditions or weightlessness have been obtained."

The only information the Russians gave on the height or distance of the flight was that it went to "great altitude." The launching site was not disclosed. The Russians also have sent other dogs into the stratosphere. They never claimed these flights succeeded — 200 miles from the earth. One dog named Albino was reported last February to have made two such flights aboard a rocket.

SPECIAL BROADCAST

Monday night's announcement was in a special broadcast which was repeated over Moscow television. No pictures of the launching were shown.

Among the instruments on the rocket, Tass said, was equipment for studying ultraviolet rays, the structure of the ionosphere, micrometeor showers, the direction and speed of air currents at various altitudes, and the density, pressure, temperature and composition of the atmosphere at various altitudes.

Last May the United States sent two female monkeys, named Able and Baker, 300 miles above the earth. They were both returned alive when the nose cone of the Jupiter missile that took them on a 10,000-mile - an-hour ride for 1,500 miles was recovered.

The Soviet satellite Sputnik II, launched Nov. 3, 1957, carried the 13-pound dog Laika. She lived for seven days in space but died from lack of oxygen long before Sputnik II burned out when it returned through the earth's atmosphere.

The total weight of the scientific instruments and animals aboard the Russian rocket was put at 2,000 kilograms—around 4,400 pounds, or more than two tons.

Jet Airliners Contaminated

LONDON (Reuters) — Jet airliners of British Overseas Airways Corporation have been contaminated by radioactive substances, the company disclosed Tuesday.

A BOAC spokesman said tests for radioactivity are being carried out at the prompting of the Pilots' Union. He said one set of tests showed the level of radioactivity was not high enough to endanger passengers. Another set of tests still is underway, he added.

BOAC said "small amounts" of radiation—thought to be partly due to fallout from hydrogen bomb blasts—were discovered on planes.

Radiation was detected on the oily surfaces of the planes' wings.

Queen Terms Chicago 'Frightfully Exciting'

CHICAGO (CP)—Queen Elizabeth captivated Chicago Monday and she in turn said she was "frightfully excited" by the city.

More than 1,000,000 persons, police said, cheered the Queen and Prince Philip in the streets. Thousands more fought to get close to Buckingham Fountain Landing where the royal couple stepped ashore in the morning.

At one moment, the crowd—mostly camera-carrying women and children—surged through police lines and swarmed toward the automobile in which the Queen and Prince Philip, governor of Illinois, were riding.

Motorcycle policemen, racing their motors, came between the spectators and the Queen and quickly restored order. There were no other incidents in the huge throngs, often standing 30 deep, that turned out to catch a glimpse of the royal couple.

MAGNIFICENT TRIBUTE

"A magnificent tribute," said Prime Minister Diefenbaker to a reporter. He had accompanied the royal couple aboard the royal yacht Britannia on the trip here from Parry Sound, Ont.

"It's all very confusing," said Prince Philip to another reporter who questioned the prince as a press car drew alongside that carrying dignitaries.

Thundering guns, the roar of two formations of U. S. Navy jets flying low in tight formation, the hoarse whistles from freighters and sirens on pleasure craft greeted the Queen and her husband in an explosion of applause as they landed in the morning.

Fireboats in the harbor sent white gushers of water shooting skyward. An elaborate pattern of fountains near the landing was turned on. The spray, caught by a brisk lake breeze, doused a packed crowd of spectators west of the pier.

After greeting Governor Stratton, Mayor Richard Daley of Chicago, and the diplomatic representatives of the United Kingdom and six Commonwealth countries, the royal party entered automobiles and drove slowly across the city to the International Trade Fair.

LOVELY DAY

It was a warm, sunny day. Elizabeth wore a black and white print dress, matching hat and white gloves. She looked cool. Her famous smile flashed and the spectators clapped and cheered.

"You will find us very keen and inquisitive sightseers," Elizabeth said in response to welcoming statements from Stratton and Daley.

At the trade fair, she backed up her words.

In a special car, she rode through the exhibits, pausing frequently to look and ask questions.

"The trade fair was frightfully impressive," said the Queen. The expression, "frightfully exciting" came from her several times as she toured Chicago.

The royal couple reached the Drake Hotel at noon and had 45 minutes to rest before going on to the governor's luncheon.

Visits to the Museum of Science and Industry and the Art Institute were to follow.

FLOCK TO HARBOR

The U. S. Coast Guard, which escorted the Britannia during its approach to Chicago, estimated that 6,000 craft were on hand to greet the royal ship as it steamed over Lake Michigan.

As the charge brought the royal party ashore from the Britannia, aerial bombs burst in the air, releasing British, Canadian and U. S. flags attached to tiny parachutes.

After reviewing a guard of honor made up of army, marine, navy and air force troops, the Queen mounted a dais covered with a royal blue cloth to receive formal greetings.

Governor Stratton said the people of America "extend to you today a very warm and heartfelt welcome."

"Our people have a deep respect and affection for your country," the Queen replied that she and her husband had looked forward for a long time to visiting Chicago.

"We extend our warmest greetings through you to the people of this city and this state and to their neighbors across the United States."

House enauffeur, A maroon-colored Laprobe bore the great seal of the president of the United States.

An air of informality ruled during the auto trip to the fair. One U. S. reporter who shouted a question to Philip was told by a British information service official that "that sort of thing just isn't done, you know."

But Philip by that time had already laughingly answered the query—"about the size of the crowd lining the streets."

"HI, QUEEN!"

Some people shouted "hi, Queen," and "hi, Philip," as the automobiles rolled past.

At one stage, Philip leaned toward a shirt-sleeved policeman armed with a revolver on one hip and a night stick on the other. "Have you had to use that thing?" he asked, pointing to the night stick.

"Many times," replied the policeman.

"But not this morning, I hope," said Philip.

The policeman said: "No, not this morning."

At navy pier, scene of the International Trade Fair, the Queen and her husband spent 20 minutes touring exhibits.

The Queen rode between Prince Philip and Mayor Daley in a special cart provided for the tour of the long pier.

The cart rolled along a specially-made red carpet stretching for 2,200 feet along the pier. When it first was installed, officials found it was 200 feet short. Workmen across early Monday to lengthen it.
