Montague Mayor Says Undecided

MONTAGUE — All councillors, the town clerk, and the town policeman were present for the regular monthly meeting of the Montague Town Council held in the council chambers last evening. Mayor B. H. Yeo presided.

Although Mayor Yeo hinted several times of retiring before the next election period on being asked he indicated he had not made up his mind yet as it is too early for such a decision.

The business of the meeting was more or less routine with the usual discussion on snow removal, the town dump, and sewage problems.

H. M. Smith was appointed as auditor for the business year of 1965 while he and George Gordon were re-appointed as assessors for the year 1966.

Fire Damages Home; Family Escapes Injury

Four members of the family of Thomas Cautey, Malpeque Road escaped injury when their home was badly damaged by fire during the early morning hours Monday.

Fire Chief Gordon Stewart last night said that most damage was confined to the basement, stairs and living room of the one-and-a-half storey home.

Cause of the fire was attributed to malfunction of a hot water heater located in the basement. The home was reportedly fully insured.

The blaze broke out shortly after two o'clock. Although the house is about a quarter mile outside the city limits, the Charlottetown Fire department responded with a pumper and the aerial ladder truck when the engineer on duty at the fire hall was advised there were people who could not get out of the house.

Immediately on arrival at the scene, firemen removed one man from a second floor window. Three persons huddled in a doorway were escorted away from the scene and a young woman made her escape by crawling onto a porch roof, from where she was assisted down.

Chief Stewart said the only difficulty encountered was that of obtaining water. The house, near the Towers Restaurant and outside the city, was about a half mile away from the nearest hydrant. The mutual aid system brought a tanker from the Parkdale Fire department and this, aided by the arrival by the city street flusher, solved the water problem.

The fire was brought under control with a half hour said Chief Stewart who added that Fireman Bill MacDonald was not injured when he fell through the floor.

high personal triumph. His talks with President Ayub Khan turned from apparent deadlock into the "Tashkent declaration," praised by Indian, Pakistani and Soviet spokesmen alike as a new step towards the establishment of a durable peace between their two countries.

Then, as he retired for a few hours of rest, came a heart attack and death.

KOSYGIN GOES TO INDIA
Indian officials said Shastri's body will be flown to New Delhi early today. Kosygin and other Soviet dignitaries are to follow in a special plane soon afterwards, a Soviet spokesman said.

Shastri had a history of heart trouble. He suffered a serious attack in 1959, but paid little heed to the warning and friends plead not to work too hard.

His health and spirits seemed good here, and never better than when he appeared at the triumphal closing reception with Ayub and Kosygin. The three leaders drank toasts to the "Tashkent declaration," which calls, among other things, for recourse to peaceful means of settling disputes between the two countries and for withdrawal of their respective armies by Feb. 25 to positions they held before the outbreak of the August-September war.

Shastri sat for more than an hour at the reception watching a display of Uzbek dancing and singing. But he ate no solid food, brushing aside the local dishes that waiters frequently offered him.

He had been due to visit Afghanistan for one day today on the way home.

The burden of office began to tell on the diminutive Shastri almost as soon as he became prime minister 1½ years ago.

Only 18 days after Shastri assumed the leadership of India June 9, 1964, he was felled by what his government called exhaustion, but what informants said was a mild heart attack.

care. The Shastri later had two other daughters and four sons. Shastri, a five-foot two-inch, 110-pounder, developed into an adroit politician and a force in the All-India Congress party, becoming its general secretary for Uttar Pradesh state—India's most populous—at 31.

In the days that followed Shastri's assumption of power, the tremendous burden of trying to better the lot of India's down-trodden millions etched lines of fatigue on the face of the man who rose from humble beginnings to the helm of the world's largest democracy.

BORN AMID POVERTY
Shastri was born in the abject poverty of a mud hut in back-country Mughalpur village in North India's Uttar Pradesh state Oct. 2, 1904.

The date was 43 years before the end of British rule brought the independence he was to help win in the non-violent resistance movement of Mohandas K. Gandhi and Nehru.

His work for freedom cost him nine years in British jails. Shastri's school teacher father died when he was 18 months old and he and his two sisters grew up with their grandfather, who sent him to school in the nearby holy city of Banaras.

SWAM GANGES
Lacking the ferry fare, sometimes he swam the Ganges, books strapped to his head.

His family endured the poverty of India's millions. So poor were they that a childhood photograph was an unobtainable luxury. "I do not know what I looked like as a young man," Shastri once said.

But the hardships of his youth endowed him with a genuine simplicity and deep understanding of the suffering of the masses and from his humble, unassuming manner came his strength with the Indian people. Still, after the aristocratic Nehru died May 27, 1964, Shastri's succession was paradoxical.

Three months before graduation, Shastri quit high school to join the independence campaign. His activities soon landed him in prison. Released, he finished high school, entered a Sanskrit college and won the degree of "Shastri," meaning graduate in ancient scriptures. The title remained part of his name.

His education behind him, he married Lalita Devi at the age of 23 and rejoined the resistance.

Imprisoned again, he got word that his year-old daughter had died of typhoid because his family lacked money for medical
