

Mr. and Mrs. Marcel Gagnon with their attendants (Meyers photo)

Marriage vows were exchanged at Saint Dunstan's Basilica, Charlottetown, on Saturday, June 5, between Helen Sumarah, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Sumarah, Charlottetown and Grindstone, Magdalen Islands, P. Q., and Marcel Gagnon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Camille Gagnon, St. Moise, Que. Rev. Father Reginald Phalen performed the double ring ceremony and celebrated the nuptial mass.

Miss Helen Roach was the soloist, accompanied by Mrs. Joseph Dougan. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers.

Given in marriage by her father.

The bride chose a full-length white gown of nylon net over taffeta and lace bodice. She carried a cascade of Pink Delight roses. A tiara of rhinestones and pearls held her finger tip veil.

Miss Florence Sumarah who was maid of honor for her sister, wore a full length gown of powder blue nylon net and lace. She carried a nosegay of pink roses.

The best man was Mr. Fred Barry of Boston, Mass. and the Magdalen Islands. Ushers were Frank, Roger and Robert Sumarah, where the groom will complete post-graduate studies in Food Technology at the University of Massachusetts.

A three-tier wedding cake centered the table which was decorated with pink and white carnations and white candles.

The couple left on a honeymoon motor trip through the Maritimes.

The bride wore a dusky rose suit with navy accessories and a corsage of sweetheart roses.

They will reside on the Magdalen Islands for the summer and then the couple will take up residence in Amherst, Massachusetts, where the groom will complete post-graduate studies in Food Technology at the University of Massachusetts.

CHILD TRAINING

(This article is another in a series on child training designed to offer guidance to parents. All publications are prepared by the Department of National Health and Welfare).

Shyness

PART I

Many children, faced with a situation they cannot handle, will react to it by hesitating and withdrawing, shutting their mouths clam-tight, even running away from it. The situation may be of the simplest kind, like a stranger asking them their name, or some other children inviting them to come and play.

Such children are excessively shy and this shyness, while usually often misunderstood and the child tagged as stupid, stubborn or "just plain cussed." Some even regard the shy child as a "good child," the kind that "can be seen and not heard" and one that "knows his proper place."

Of course we don't expect all children to be equally sociable. Some children are less responsive to social situations while others are the "life of the party." The quiet, self-reliant child is not the subject of this folder, but rather the child who is shy because he lacks self-reliance in social situations. Such shyness is not only not a virtue but usually a sign that something has gone wrong during the process of growing up.

Also, we are not concerned here with the shyness which almost every child shows around five or six months of age, nor with that commonly seen around the two-year mark.

What does pose a problem for the parent, however, is the shyness sometimes found in the preschool and school-age child which makes it difficult for him to take part in social activities such as games and parties.

Stated in a nutshell, the shy child needs to have a better opinion of himself. Somehow, he's missed out on one or both of the "musts" that should have gone into strengthening his personality.

First of these is the all-important one, the lack of which seems to be at the root of so many troubles in child training.

Your child must always feel that you want him and love him, no matter what.

He needs to know that he can "belong" to you, that he can count on you for understanding, come what may. While he was a helpless baby he needed your complete protection and loving care. Now, as he is growing up, he still needs affectionate help and direction as he begins to take over activities, decisions and responsibilities for himself. The security that comes from knowing that you, his parents are standing by with approval, understanding and interest is the broad firm base from which your child steps confidently forth to meet new people and new situations.

There are some common pitfalls into which even the best-meaning parents often fall, thus failing to give their children this security even while loving them dearly.

Telling your child "I won't love you any more!" or angrily calling him "a bad boy" can have consequences you would be very anxious to avoid. On the other hand, avoiding unpleasantness for him (and yourself) by failing to help him face the need for self-control and restraint can be a serious matter, too. Some parents, anxious to rear "a perfect child," criticize too freely and overwork the "No's" and the "Don'ts." They find they have raised a child that is always ill at ease, hesitant, drawing back from any kind of action or decision.

Indulging a child one minute and scolding him the next doesn't provide a firm base of security, either. Restrain and control him on the important issues until he learns to control himself. You can do this in such a way that he has no doubt that you love him, or that he himself is all right, even though he's got to stop what he's doing.

Better English

By D. C. Williams

1. What is wrong with this sentence? "My friend and myself were interested in what he had to say."

2. What is the correct pronunciation of "absorb"?

3. Which one of these words is misspelled: Sanatorium, sanatorium, sanguinary, sarcophagus.

4. What does the word "posthumous" mean?

5. What is a word beginning with "c" that means "formal consultation"?

ANSWERS

1. Say, "My friend and I." 2. Pronounce second syllable as sorb, not as zorb. 3. Sanatorium. (Pronounce post-tu-mus, o as in on, not as in post, tu as in picture, accent first syllable). "The hero was given a posthumous award." 5. Conference.

HYDROCORTISONE OINTMENT IN THE TREATMENT OF SKIN DISEASES

Regularly we hear or read about the use of cortisone in various ailments. Its effectiveness in various skin conditions prompted physicians to try it in ointment form, applied directly to the skin. However, it was the experience of most observers, with few exceptions, that the local application of cortisone acetate in ointment form had no real value. When it was found that hydrocortisone was effective when injected directly into an arthritic joint, it was decided to try its use in skin conditions as well.

In Medical Clinics of North America, Dr. Marion B. Sulzberger and Victor H. Winton report their results with hydrocortisone. In order to evaluate the drug's effectiveness, one side of the face was treated with one preparation and the other side with another. The patients were not told the names of the preparations and were simply told to apply to right side or left side. Patients were observed at intervals during the first few weeks of treatment and thereafter at longer intervals in some cases. In general, the patients were most cooperative, found the treatment easy and pleasant, and made every effort to follow directions to the letter.

There were undeniable evidences of improvement. Skin irritation lessened gradually with less oozing and crust formation and reduced scaling. Scratching and other evidences of damage done by rubbing and scratching disappeared. The time required for a favorable response was as little as 48 hours in many cases and it was not unusual to see as much as 75 to 90 per cent improvement by the end of one week of treatment. Two applications a day were usually sufficient when starting treatment and then gradually decreased as improvement progressed. The strength of the ointment was a 2.5 per cent concentration in most cases.

Both the patient and the physician appreciate the fact that this ointment does not burn or sting when applied, does not stain skin, clothing or other objects, has no disagreeable odor and is not uncomfortable or unsightly when rubbed in well. There were no cases of allergy or sensitiveness to the ointment.

Young Men's Ways

DEAR MISS DIX: When Ralph first asked me for a date last year I had to refuse since my Dad wouldn't let me date. Now I have permission to go out one night a week and I thought Ralph would be overjoyed at the news, but he took me out just once. He hasn't asked for another date, though he comes to visit me once in a while. However, I have learned that he goes with a girl from the neighborhood. I never told him about it, but would like to know why he continues to visit me, then dates the other girl.

Margie

DON'T WASTE DATING PRIVILEGES

ANSWER: That's the way of young men, Margie, and you might as well get used to it now. You're foolish to waste your newly acquired privileges sitting around waiting for Ralph to come through with an invitation. Since it is apparently well known at school that he's dating at least two girls, the other boys shouldn't expect you to sit home pining. Even though the honor code says "hands off," when it comes to dating another boy's girl, you certainly can't be considered as Ralph's steady. Do get into circulation.

DEAR MISS DIX: Our 15-year-old daughter is a fine girl—intelligent, a good student and quite attractive. Lately, however, she has gotten quite difficult at home. She won't listen to her father or to me, is untidy about her room, resents being asked to help with housework and even has been impudent. Can you account for this sudden change in disposition?

Mrs. F.

ANSWER: Your daughter's behavior follows an almost fixed pattern of adolescent conduct. A child's entire personality can change between the ages of 13 and 18, but fortunately for us harassed parents of teen-agers, it almost always smooths out, leaving pleasant young men or women. I have compiled a list of books and pamphlets on teen-agers and that will help you considerably in understanding your daughter's moods. If you will send me a self-addressed stamped envelope, I'll gladly send you the list.

DEAR MISS DIX: My husband and I were married in January, and our baby girl was born three months later. We live with my folks; my husband's parents have not yet seen the baby. They invited me to visit them, and bring her, but I hesitate because I'm sure they don't like me. Do you think they'll be nice to me if I go?

Dolly L.

ANSWER: Why draw hasty and adverse conclusions about people? Be gracious enough to give your in-laws a chance to know you and be pleasant to them so they'll want to become friends. Let them see that you and your husband can rise above the mistake you made and they'll respect you for your efforts. Meet the offered friendliness with friendliness of your own and you'll have no in-law troubles. Accept the invitation.

DEAR MISS DIX: I'm terribly in love with a boy who's engaged and married woman. When he's

FAIN - REVEALING DISCARDS

The sound opening lead made by West in the following hand was rendered null and void by his subsequent discarding.

South dealer. East-West vulnerable.

♠ 10 6 3	♥ Q 6	♦ A Q J 7	♣ J 10 5 4
♠ A 8 4 2	♥ J 10 9 7	♦ 9 6	♣ 9 6
♠ N	♥ W	♦ E	♣ S
♠ K 7	♥ A K 8	♦ K 10 8 5	♣ A K Q 8

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	1♦	Pass
3NT	Pass	4♣	Pass
4♣	NT	Pass	4NT
			Pass

It is easy to see that if West had cashed the spade ace on opening lead, declarer could have spread the cards for 12 tricks, so West deserved credit for rejecting that choice in favor of the heart jack. Winning the first trick in dummy, declarer cashed all four diamond tricks, then the three top clubs. East discarded two hearts, and West properly relinquished two spades. But when declarer then led the club eight toward dummy's jack, West, who had to play before his partner, made a discard which was really two errors in one—he not only gave up another spade but did it with such obvious pain that he might well have announced that he was blanking the ace. So it was no great feat for South to return a spade from the Board and when East put in the nine, to duck.

In the ensuing debate West hotly pointing out that he could not tell whether South had started with four hearts or only three—hence, he did not know that he could afford to abandon his (West's) heart stopper. But this did not excuse the "pain" West revealed in his actual discarding; and for that matter, there was a highly significant clue about South's hand-pattern. South had shown four diamonds and four clubs; if he had held four hearts also, he scarcely would have jumped from one diamond to three notrump on the singleton spade this would give him—not even on the singleton king—not spades.

around this woman I am positively sick. Then I say nasty things to him and am sorry later. He's mean to me, too, sometimes, but I know it's only to hide his real feelings. Do you think he's fickle?

R. D.

ANSWER: I wonder what a man would have to do to prove to you he was fickle. Apparently it takes more than being engaged to one girl, carrying on a flirtation with a married woman, and keeping a third dangling on a string. If there's an iota of constancy in such actions, it's a new attitude to me.

ELLEN'S DIARY

by an Island Farmer's Wife

"This?" Gage replied in some surprise to a question of his Dad's in the stable this morning. "Why, it's a mouse! I'm going to tether him (when I get a piece of string) to the leg of the table while I eat my breakfast. And then, if I have time" his eyes sparkled in anticipation, "I'm going to give the kitten a lesson in mouse-catching. I know beforehand that one is smarter than the rest." Rob smiled. "I'm afraid you'll have to revise your plans," he offered. "Do you want your Grandmother to eat her meal standing on her chair?"

The back doorstep proved to be a better waiting-ground for the beastie and it was there, his breakfast hastily swallowed, that the surprised lad found only the string later and the white mother-est sitting with innocent expression beside.

"It's the change of moon" a farmer in the yard commented gloomily this afternoon when the brooding skies commenced to let fall their burden of damp. He shook his head. "I wouldn't doubt but that we're in for a week of this weather. The wind's in a rainy quarter too. Could be it's the sheep-storm."

Mild the wind was and gentle as from the south it entered our valley rich with the incense of apple and cherry blossoms and lilac—the crowning glory of orchard, garden and hedgerow.

"It's too early yet for the sheep-storm, isn't it?"

"Well maybe. . . . But if we happen to get a few days of this broken weather it's going to make quite a delay in rounding up the cropping. And there's a nice bit of seed to go in the ground yet. . . . I hear."

Prettily comes the new grain, covering with a delicate spread the red of the sown fields. Presently little summer breezes will stir it to ripples of satins-green. And one day in a ripe and lovely season of azure sky and sunlight warmly gold, it will come to the harvest.

Tonight thoughts of another harvest come to mind and of a reaping that has little to do with the fields of the farmlands. Except that they have been left desolate.

Rhubarb is yet in season so your family can still enjoy this recipe for rhubarb pudding, which Alpha Women's Institute have provided this week. You'll also enjoy a novel casserole dish, which has seven layers to it—and will appear in next day's issue.

RHUBARB PUDDING

3 cups rhubarb
1 cup sugar
Set on stove till mixture begins to boil. Add cottage pudding batter on top and bake in oven until brown.

Note: Other fruit may be substituted.

Cottage Pudding Batter

1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons melted butter
1 cup milk
2 cups flour
1 teaspoon soda
2 teaspoons cream of tartar
1 egg (optional)
Bake in pan 1/2 hour in moderate oven.

This batter may also be baked in muffin tins and served with butter-sauce made as follows:

Butterscotch Sauce

2 tablespoons butter
3/4 cup brown sugar
1/3 cup cream
Melt the butter in saucepan. Add brown sugar and stir over fire and boil 1 minute. Add cream and leave over heat until melted.

The Stars Say

By Estrellita

For Tomorrow

YESTERDAY'S stimulating aspects continue, but there is a possibility that they could produce either nervous tension or over-optimism. In such case, it would be well to be on the alert, to avoid making snap decisions and to be on guard against errors.

Properly directed, however, the emotional drive engendered by tomorrow's astral influences, can be most constructive.

During the evening hours avoid over-indulgence in any form. Conserve energy for an unusually active period ahead. Romance and courtship are under fine aspects now.

For the Birthday

If tomorrow is your birthday, you may look ahead to a year marked by unforeseen business changes and a remarkable improvement in your financial status. The business changes may be environment, or they may involve either promotion or expansion, depending upon your individual situation.

A child born on this day will be imaginative, creative and endowed with a warm and lovable personality.

How Can I?

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I renovate hat bands?
A. Brush with a sponge or small brush, with a solution made by dissolving 1 1/2 oz. of white castile soap in 4 oz. of alcohol, to which is added 1 oz. each of sulphuric ether and water of ammonia. Rinse in clear rain water.
Q. How can I re-size a rug?
A. Dissolve 1 pound of granulated glue in 1 gallon of boiling water. Tack the rug, face down, on the floor and apply the hot glue to the back with a whitewash brush.
Q. How can I remove old varnish and paint?
A. Dissolve thoroughly one quart of good caustic soda in three quarts of lukewarm water and apply with a coarse sponge.

Skin Lotion
To make a lotion for whitening the skin mix 2 tablespoonsful of oatmeal, 1/2 tablespoonful of powdered borax, and 1/2 pint rosewater. Let it stand for 2 or 3 days, then strain well and add 1/2 ounce of alcohol.

Bathing Cap
If the bathing cap has stuck together, soak it in clear, cold water. Always, before putting it away, dry the cap thoroughly to prevent it sticking together.

Zinc
To clean zinc cut a lemon into halves, take one half and rub the zinc. Allow it to remain for an hour then wipe off. It will make the zinc like new.
