U.S., Canadian Scouts Taste Filipino Dishes

MANILA—American and Canadian boys got a real taste of Filipino life July 19 at the 10th World Boy Scout Jamboree.

It was "Filipino Day" at the camp site 35 miles south of Manila, and the taste of local life included chamorado, or rice-and-chocolate "atmeal" for breakfast and lechon, pork with sweet sauce for lunch.

The 320 American Scouts and their Canadian comrades dug in manfully along with 3,000 other youngsters from abroad attending the first World Jamboree to be held in an Asian nation. The 10-day gathering of 11,000 lads opened July 18.

The visiting Scouts also were introduced to native dances like the popular "tinkling." In this one, agile boys from Louisiana to Quebec skipped between two bamboo poles as Filipino Scouts enthusiastically clapped in time to music.

The North Americans took to it all in a big way. "It feels just like home," declared 17-year-old Charles Le Blanc of Franklin, La. Charles explained his own state has "much the same sort of climate as here."

Young Le Blanc, a veteran of the 1957 World Jamboree in Britain, praised the Filipinos for going all out to make their overseas guests welcome.

Try An Herb Stuffing In Baked Lake Trout

The Chef and I arrived at "Phil De Graff's Place" at Trout Lake after a long drive. But Phil did not offer to "show me around."

Instead he suggested an hour's rest on the big green leather couch near a picture window in my sitting room.

I fell asleep, then awakened with a feeling that someone was looking at me. The "some one" was a beautiful live fawn, poised on a crag opposite the picture window!

The main lodge is located on the shore of Trout Lake. There is a broad flagstone terrace with tables for games or meals. Towering trees natural to the Upper Peninsula of Michigan shield other lodges built along the wooded roads.

Dinner was served about 6:30 and a bench for everyone, the glow of the sunset streaming through picture windows. Dress was casual and all new guests were introduced by witty "M.C." Phil De Graff, the host. He carved the roast, and tossed the salad with every trick known to a maitre d' and a few more of his own.

"I aim to have simple foods, well cooked—and garnished and served with flair," he announced. "Bravo!" approved the Chef. We enjoyed the following menu.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Think Of Winter Frost 'Twill Keep You Cool

Today to put an old song of scene in our housework, the scene of the mowing moved to the field just beyond the trees of the old orchard—there where this evening the black cat strolled on some cat-quest over the mown green.

When the mowing comes close to the houses we housewives must look to our properties—our children, our chicks, our pup and the cats. For no matter how intriguingly pastoral the picture it makes in the haylands a mow can be an evil machine. Pets have died from its wounds. Children we know, of the "dear dead days" still bear scars received from old-time-horse-drawn mowers. How much greater the hazard from those tractor-drawn, noisier, faster and so powerful!

With the pup seated beside us on the back porch we watched the progress of the machine. Round after round the summer-fullness fell. He whimpered, a little auid by the strange sight and sound.

"You find it-mourful too?" we commented. "Yes, the sound is a sort of dirge, isn't it? For the summer passing so quickly away."

"It will be as well when the summer is over 'one who came by Alderlea today offered, "not that it's not a delightful time of year but there won't be so many traffic accidents, once the rush of the holiday season is past."

But here it was today—summer washed clean by a night-shower, fresh of face and very sweet.

"And no saving of hay today!" we said at noon—so sunny and pleasant. And James chatting with a visitor in the yard at the time smiled and said teasingly "Ellen's something like the woman born and reared in a city who was here the other summer. She remarked of the weather, "It's just wonderful isn't it! And isn't it fortunate for the farmers—it rains at night and it keeps sunny by day for them to save their hay!"

"There's never much hay saved," James nodded soberly. "The day after night-showers! At least not the way we make it on these farms."

"It's hot" one of the children complained of this afternoon's heat.

"Think of last winter's frosts—that will keep you cool!" we advised with a chuckle.

Only pleasantly warm James found it at his tilling before the round-drills in a far field, an item which gave him to work with a horse-drawn scuffler after the familiar old-time ways. To enjoy the clean breeze wandering, and stop to drink at the spring, and there in the quiet and loveliness find peace from the petty cares of his world.

And this night while the Lady Moon keeps, and with her silver and shadows makes the farmlands a fairy place, down where "the army of silent searchers" move in bright flecks by the stream and up to the moonlighted hillsides?

"Home—and bed!" James says parting from Mack at the door a twinkle in his voice. "By the looks of the night, we'll have the right hay-day tomorrow! Bed now... and early up to be ready for it. We'll 'Make hay when the sun shines', won't we?"

Until tomorrow — — — Diary, Good-night.
