offered for May or September, 1964 — must be French. And the "other one" must be related or well known to the French traveller and come from a nation acceptable to the Chinese Communists.

From Peking the travellers, who are promised first-class hotels and rooms with bath, will board a Soviet jetliner for visits to Moscow and Leningrad, thus embracing in one stupendous journey the two warring giants of the Communist world.

According to the Paris correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, this grand tour is but the latest evidence of the thickening ties between the two countries. It is noted that films on Communist China are appearing on television screens in millions of French homes, and that the Peking opera has arrived in Paris to give a series of performances, almost certain to be a box-office smash.

No Frenchman will be naive enough to suppose that these gestures on the part of Red China are entirely disinterested. But what of it? Even accepting them as propaganda stunts, should they be discouraged on that ground? The French do not think so. They believe—at least President de Gaulle does—that "there is no political reality in Asia that does not concern China."

It could be that the French are right, and Washington policy makers woefully wrong in the course they have been following in this vital matter.

Now and then a tube (bronchoscope) is passed through the mouth into the lungs to remove thick sputum. I am not acquainted with the use of a catheter which is passed through an opening in the neck when breathing is difficult.
