Defence Dept. Selling Job Slips Up In Armed Forces

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP)—The defence department has been able to "sell" the public on integration of the armed forces command structure more convincingly than the armed forces themselves.

This seems to be the general consensus not only of service personnel but of the department itself.

This is shown in part by the fact that senior officers from headquarters here are being dispatched to commands in the field to talk to servicemen about integration and how it will affect them.

Nobody expected integration would be carried out without a hitch. Canada is the first country to try to put such a plan into effect.

But, informants say, some pitfalls could have been avoided.

The most common complaint heard about implementation of the new system is that the department is treating servicemen directly affected as statistics instead of as human beings.

COULD FIND JOBS

For instance, little or no provision has been made to find new jobs for officers and men, some of whom have spent their entire adult lives in the services, who are being let out because some positions now are redundant.

Many feel that the defence, industry and defence production departments could have established a liaison committee with private industry and business to help find places for these men in civilian life.

Because this has not been done, they say morale has been hurt.

The mood of the armed forces appears to be not one of opposition to integration but rather one of uncertainty and "show me that it works."

Persons who have been assigned new jobs on the integrated staff appear enthusiastic about them and are prepared to settle down to help solve the attendant problems.

MANY NOT TOLD

But there are many others who have not yet been told—integration went into effect officially Aug. 1—what job they will go to or even whether there will be a job for them.

As a result, some of the best officers the defence department wanted to retain have retired voluntarily.

Servicemen being compulsorily retired receive a pension and a cash bonus, the amount depending on rank and length of service.

But the federal cabinet's treasury board is reported objecting to some of these payments in cases where the serviceman is scheduled to retire in a few years' anyway. This resulting in a trend away from integration: keeping a man in uniform until he reaches retirement age though there may be no specific job for him.

Committee Report Is Seen Best Seller For UC Members

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP)—A committee report on communism and Christianity could well become a "best seller" among United Church members this fall and winter.

Prepared by the church's committee on Christian faith for the 21st general council which began its sessions here this week, the report is the culmination of four years of study and if approved by council, will be offered to congregations for use in youth and adult groups.

Issued as a supplement to the regular council agenda, the report is entitled Communist Faith and Christian Faith and endeavors to compare the basic convictions of Communist and Christian regarding nature, man and God; economics and property; history, hope and morality.

"Christians and Communists live in the same world and will continue to do so for many years," the report says in its introduction. "Their relations to each other are more complex and varied than North Americans are apt to suppose. It may well prove indeed, that the most urgent question for Christians is not how to meet Communism, but how to meet Communists."

PROVIDES BASIS

The committee does not attempt to provide specific answers, but leaves it to findings in the report and other recommended reading, "to help provide a basis for Christian decisions which are reasonable and faithful."

The committee concluded that "all Christians should accept some of the general emphasis in Marxist - Leninist thought, without necessarily accepting it in detail. A christian should reject Communist atheism, although he may agree with many Communist criticisms of religion.

"A Christian should accept Communist concern for the poor and powerless insofar as it resembles the divine concern which is revealed throughout the Bible.

"A Christian is free either to accept or to reject the Communist account of economic processes which are at work in modern capitalism. A Christian is free in the sense that his faith does not dictate answers to factual questions in economics. If he accepts or rejects Communist answers to such questions, it is because these answers do not square with the facts."

The report is signed by Rev. D. M. Mathers, chairman, and Rev. J. R. Hord, secretary, of the committee. However, credit for its final form is given to Professor D. D. Evans, formerly of Montreal Theological College and recently appointed to the philosophy department of the University of Toronto.

Chains Removed From Beaver's Red Crusader

LONDON (CP) — Three months after Lord Beaverbrook's death, the chains have fallen from his little red crusader, just as silently as they were entwined about him 13 years ago.

The crusader, spear and shield advanced in challenge, was created as Beaverbrook's symbol of empire and appears at the top of the front page of The Daily Express. He has been there since 1931.

On Oct. 15, 1951, the little warrior appeared in chains and there wasn't a word of explanation at the time.

Three weeks later, The Express, the Canadian - born Beaverbrook's mass - circulation newspaper, said the chains would remain until a Tory government announced an empire policy.

And there they stayed—until Monday, when The Express printed the crusader once more free of chains although presumably still in pursuit of his holy grail.

Beaverbrook died June 9 at the age of 85. Perhaps the biggest disappointment of the vastly - successful publisher was the failure of his long-sustained empire campaign.

Sir Max Aitken, Beaverbrook's son and successor, was said to be away from London Monday. Other Express officials left word with their secretaries to answer "no comment" to queries about the crusader and his chains.

In 1931, when the crusader first appeared, Beaverbrook formed the Empire Freetraders Party, seeking a duty against foreign food and materials and free entry for Dominion producers.

The imperial conference at Ottawa in 1932, creating imperial preferences, fell short of Beaverbrook's hopes. The publisher was busy in the service of king and country during the Second World War but returned to his empire campaign later.

Oldsmobile Adds New Model Line

DETROIT (AP)—Oldsmobile division of General Motors showed its 1965 line at a press preview here, with the emphasis on roomier and sportier models.

A new line, the Delta 88, was added to Oldsmobile's cars. In all, Olds will have 32 models and feature more powerful engines.

Oldsmobile will also feature a sharply sloping roof line as will most GM cars this year.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1NT	Dble	2♠	3♠
Pass	3NT

Opening lead — six of spades.

The declarer can generally falsecard much more effectively than a defender, since his partner cannot be misled by anything he does, but there are times when a defender can also practice deceptive tactics without cost to his side.

Here is such a case. South became declarer at three notrump after East had opened the bidding with a weak notrump. West led a spade and South took the ten with the Queen.

There was not much hope of making the contract without establishing the diamond suit, so South led the ten of diamonds at trick two and finessed. East decided that this was a good time to falsecard, and he won the ten with the king. East was trying to persuade declarer that West had the jack.

East returned a spade to the king, and South, in order to get back to his hand to repeat the successful (?) diamond finesse, played a low club from dummy and finessed the jack, which held.

Declarer then played another diamond; but, when West showed out, the hand suddenly collapsed. East won the diamond with the jack and returned the king of clubs to force out the ace, and South found that he could not possibly make more than eight tricks. As a result, he would go going down one, losing three diamonds and two clubs.

Of course, South could have made the contract had he not been lulled into a false sense of security by East's falsecard. He could have led a diamond from dummy with complete safety after winning trick three with the king of spades, and this play would have made the hand for him. No defense could then have stopped three notrump.

Probably South should not have fallen into the trap that East laid for him, but the fact is that he did. This merely points up a factor in play that is insufficiently stressed, namely, that skill in card play includes giving the opponents the maximum opportunity of making a mistake.
