BULLETINS FROM BIRDLAND

WINIFRED E. WILSON

HEAD GEAR

When we don our Easter bonnets, migrants are only beginning to return. However, of the many birds sporting attractive head gear, a few are true Canadians, and so may be seen in some part of our vast country any month of the year. The vivid Cardinal of southern Ontario, the splendid Blue Jay of our wooded districts, and the spectacular Pileated Woodpecker which shuns civilization are all crested. Long-eared, Short-eared, and Screech Owls have tufts of feathers springing from their foreheads. Our winter visitor from the far north, the Redpoll, has a hat. Numerous birds wear some kind of head gear. This may be merely a few, oft-concealed feathers, as the Ruby-crowned Kinglet's, a great big, fluffy bonnet, as the Hooded Merganser, or a neat, black band stretched across the front of the head, as the Piping Plover's. The reddish orange crown patch of the Kingbird and the brown one of the Nashville Warbler are so well hidden that few of us know they exist.

Small caps are stylish: yellow for the Myrtle Warbler, black for our best-known Chickadee, orange bordered with black for the Oven-bird. The little black cap of the Goldfinch is jauntily poised over his nose. Golden-crowned Kinglets believe in variety. His is most interestingly trimmed: a tiny orange crown and a yellow brim outlined in black. Yellow takes the place of orange on his wife's head. The Common Tern's is large enough to be called a hat. Oddly enough, Mrs. American Merganser wears a chestnut crest while her husband has none. The colorful Wood Duck's is iridescent green and purple. The sleek Cedar Waxwing's is a soft brown matching the suit. One of the Cormorants is termed "Double-crested." Actually a tuft of black feathers grows on either side of its head. And although the Green Heron, when alarmed raised a lustrous dark green crest, its cousin, the Black-crowned Night Heron, has two long, white, pencil-like plumes falling from its black hat. The "horns" of the Great Horned Owl are really tufts of feathers, the same as the "ears" of those other Owls. But the head dresses of the Horned Lark and of the Horned Grebe are quite different. The Lark's "horns" are very long, narrow, black feathers that stand up; those of the Grebe are large, conspicuous, buffy-white ear-muffs. Ecuador's Umbrella Bird uses the most daring millinery: its crest is its umbrella.

Who was Audubon?

battle in Detroit. And it's hard to tell whether Walcott is grinning or in slight pain. Charles retained his title by a close decision, though it was an unpopular verdict to some of the crowd, sentimentally inclined towards Jersey Joe.

Fine New Issue Of Red And White

The St. Dunstan's University magazine, "Red and White" is once more off the press and lives up to the reputation set in previous issues of this educational and entertaining work.

The present number, volume forty-two, is the Winter edition of the book which is published three times a year by students of the University. Some of the contributors shows a decided flair for writing in the articles which are included, and poems composed by the students range from the humorous to the bizarre.

A number of essays and stories are both informative and interesting, and an editorial on Easter contains a challenge which applies to all. The last few pages are taken as is customary by the "Nonsense Avenue" section, packed full of wit with a dash of wisdom for good measure.

Staff of the magazine 'are as follows: Editor-in-Chief, George Keefe; Assistant Editor, Dominic MacDonald; Associate Editors, (Chronicle) Leonard O'Hanley, (Athletics) Augustus Flynn, (Nonsense Avenue) Frank Sigsworth and Elmer MacPhee; Contributing Editors, Fred Coyle, Robert Croken, Katherine Roche, Alla MacDonald, and Leonce Gallant; Business Manager, Mark MacGuigan, and Assistant Business Managers, James Saunders and John Weir.

Concerned Over Joe DiMaggio's Batting Slump

HOLLYWOOD, Calif., March 21 (AP) — Joe DiMaggio's failure to hit in his accustomed style is causing some concern in the camp of New York Yankees.

DiMaggio has collected only two hits, both home runs, in 18 official times at bat in Grapefruit League games. That's a weak 111 mark.

The clipper himself is not unduly worried. DiMaggio jokes with his teammates and expects to get going any time.

Actually his timing is not far off. He is meeting the ball but is either cutting under or topping it.

"I seem to have trouble getting my timing adjusted," he said today. "That happens to me often early in the year. I manage to get a piece of the ball but not enough of it. That's really all I know."

Last year DiMaggio slugged at a .403 clip during a six-week period before the regular season opened.

Rogers Hornsby, now manager of Seattle in the coast league, said he had the same trouble when he was in the 30 age bracket.

"I found that every spring after I got well into my 30s it was harder to get started," Hornsby said. "There doesn't seem to me to be anything wrong with Joe than the fact he's 36 years old."

Another factor may be that DiMaggio is trying too hard. DiMaggio wants this to be a great year and he especially wants to shine during the tour of his home state.

DiMaggio is in good shape with the exception that, at about 190 pounds, he is about 15 pounds below the weight he likes to start the season.

R. T. Holman

enjoyed the esteem and patronage of farmers and city people until their retirement in 1911, when it was taken over by their son, Ray Sellar and Mrs. Sellar. They conducted it for a year or two and then moved to Winnipeg, selling the hotel to Mrs. Charles MacEachern, who catered in the same manner to transients and permanent guests until Mrs. MacEachern decided to leave for Boston, and sold the hotel to Mrs. Lavinia MacMillan and her son Claude MacMillan. Some years afterwards Claude took over the property and has kept it as boarding house or rooming house ever since and has maintained its popularity with guests and neighbors.

It is understood that Mr. and Mrs. MacMillan will continue on in the Morrell House for some time as it is not likely that building operations will take place until steel, which is now reserved for military purposes, is available.

Many will be interested to know that the firm of R. T. Holman, Ltd., whose merchandising career has been phenomenal in this Province, are so aware of the possibilities for business in Charlottetown that they have purchased this valuable property and intend to build a worthwhile store on it. With new structures which have recently risen on Kent Street such as the Currie Building on the corner of Queen and Kent, the Kennedy building occupied by Crockett and Storey Ltd., and the Jones building occupied by Jack Cameron and Holman's, the Block Building, the Douglas Bros. & Jones Building and the expected new building to be erected on the site of Henry McFarlane and Eldon Hotel buildings, Kent Street is bound to be one of the busiest and most important thoroughfares in Charlottetown.
