

The social event of the week in London, Canada and elsewhere was the birth of a new princess and additional prospective heiress to the throne after her brother, Prince Charles. Princess Elizabeth astonished every one with her sang-froid in facing the ordeal, appearing in public till just the hour of delivery. Most people are pleased that the new member of the royal family is a girl, making a pigeon-pair, though not a few expected another boy would provide a playmate for brother Charles.

Within five weeks it is regarded as a certainty that the Princess and her husband will take the baby along with Prince Charles to Birkhall, near Balmoral Castle. The residence was placed at their disposal by the King. There has been considerable speculation about the likely names that will be given to the new Princess. Those nearest the family circle are guessing that Elizabeth will get first place. Other odds-on favorites are said to be Mary, Victoria and Anne.

But there is a possibility no announcement of the baby's name will be made until the christening. Following tradition, the ceremony will likely take place within four to six weeks in the private chapel at Buckingham Palace with the Archbishop of Canterbury officiating. The baby will then wear the robe of ivory, satin and rare lace, which Queen Victoria had specially made for her first-born. The baby Prince will inherit Prince Charles' crib, perambulator and outgrown toys, as well as much of his baby clothing.

The birth entitles Elizabeth and Philip to claim an allowance of five shillings a week under Britain's national insurance act. The allowance is made for the second child and all subsequent births in each family. Elizabeth is unlikely to claim it, receives an allowance of £40,000 a year and the Duke £10,000 from the treasury. Philip, recently promoted to lieutenant-commander in the Royal Navy, also receives £12 shillings in base pay and a service marriage allowance of 18s 6d a day. The first present, a little Prince, will receive a string of coral beads from her mother. Elizabeth wore the beads herself as a baby. A gift of coral to a new-born baby is said to bring luck.

On the occasion of Pakistan Day, August 15, the High Commissioner for Pakistan and Begum Mohammed Ali entertained at an evening reception. The High Commissioner and Begum Mohammed Ali received their guests in the spacious drawing-room which was decorated in white, pink and yellow gladioli. The Begum Mohammed Ali wore a costume consisting of a blue satin sharara, a blue chiffon kurta embroidered in silver and a blue chiffon dupatta. Among the guests were the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet, the diplomatic corps, prominent Ottawa citizens and Government officials. The reception ended with the orchestra playing the Pakistan national anthem, not yet very familiar in Ottawa.

The High Commissioner for the United Kingdom and Mrs. G. G. Mackenzie are on a tour of the Maritimes and Newfoundland and will return to Ottawa about the middle of September. They are accompanied by Miss Anne Clutterbuck, Miss Jane Durrant and St. John Chadwick, first secretary at the office of the High Commissioner.

It was praiseworthy of the Provincial Government to acquire the Women's Institute's layette exhibit to present to Princess Elizabeth for her new baby. The Queen Mary Club annually sends the Queen Mother a handsome box of exceedingly fine linen work for her children's hospital, and the Women's Institutes are adding to the work via Government intermediary.

VITAMIN B—THIAMINE—IN TREATMENT OF MENTAL DEFECTIVES

When it was found that folic acid enriched the iron in the blood equally as well as liver and liver extract, it was considered a great boon, as pernicious anemia patients grow tired of eating liver even if it is served in fifty-seven different ways. They also grow tired of taking injections of liver extract. However, it was later found that while folic acid enriched the blood as well as liver and liver extract, it failed to help or correct the "nervous" symptoms that occur in pernicious anemia.

As vitamin B is considered the best single treatment for the "nerves," especially the thiamine of vitamin B, thiamine is now added to the folic acid treatment of pernicious anemia. And because it is used for "nerves," Dr. G. de M. Rudolf tried using thiamine in the treatment of mental defectives.

In the Journal of Mental Science, London, Dr. Rudolf tells of his investigations of use of thiamine in treating the entire population (687) of a mental deficiency colony. Those who had shown no improvement in behavior, either in their lodges, at school, or at work were given 3 mg. thiamine, once daily, for five or six months. The patients had been in the colony for mental defectives for three to 17 years. Of the entire colony treated, five became more violent or destructive; in three of the five, the thiamine treatment was discontinued. Of the 90 patients who received the full course, 44 (about half) showed improvement in one or more of the following aspects: behavior in lodge work or school, social age in relation to their actual age, and intelligence quotient (IQ).

Just how long the above improvement by use of thiamine will continue and how much of it will be permanent is not, of course, known at present. However, the improvement brought about by this part (thiamine) of vitamin B means psychiatrists and general physicians, some of whom think the public is putting too much faith in the value of vitamins, will prescribe more thiamine and watch its effect not only in mental defectives but in many who are at present working hard "on their nerves" in these strenuous days.

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

August spreads now a night coolness over the fields and farmsteads, which makes us add a stick of "the Sunday wood" to the fire and close the doors against its chill. "Frosts we'll have a touch of frost tonight?" we inquired with some misgivings of James who is careful to keep a finger on the pulse of the weather. But he laughed at our fears, and settling his hat at it's best angle and smiling his Adieu he set out with the younger farmer on an outing to the city. For the two — and sometimes for Jeanie, who also finds a magic in it, this has become a usual week-end excursion, taking them as it does to a spell of entertainment at "the Sport of Kings". If James in anticipation speaks of it casually and professes that now he is "getting too old to thrill to it" it is no idle fancy of ours that there is a decided spring to his step at the out-going thither. And in spite of assertions to the contrary and a seasonal assumed lack of interest in the event, there appeared to be an added swing to the work today which spoke of attendance at the Old Home Week to come.

In consideration of our farm set, we remember that this week the event has been favorably brought to the close of the haymaking, the cultivating in the potato-patch has been attended to faithfully, and the spraying as well. And today the plants were paraded for inspection — a ceremony not so infrequent.

The Stars Say --

By Genevieve Kemble

For Sunday, August 20

WHILE there may be in sight a very substantial promise of rich returns with brilliant recognition for exceptional merits, new and sensational skills, it is possible that long-range benefits may be set aside for temporary rewards.

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may be disposed to pass up the more solid and enduring advantages accruing from their excellent performance, originality or genius for the ephemeral and temporary Certain flimsy tokens of preference may obscure the genuine and lasting.

A child born on this day, while not lacking in serious ambitions, may be lured to fleeting and ephemeral social or romantic compensations.

For Monday, August 21

MONDAY'S astrological forecast is a conflicting one. Although affairs may be lively and the mentality spurred to clear thinking and quick action, with excellent opening for gain and desirable change yet there is augury of loss, also hazard through over-expansive tendencies.

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday it is, are prone to over-estimate conditions wherein assets, financial investments may be dangerous because of the gambling instinct to "take a chance, even though the judgment urges discretion. It is advisable to suppress expansive notions and to pursue a down-to-earth policy.

A child born on this day, while having an acute mentality may find its optimism, enthusiasm, gambling instinct, overruling its thought processes.
