MARY HAWORTH

Immature Fortytish Men Date Debutante-Age Girls

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In a recent discussion of dated girls, you mentioned that if they are, you concluded by saying:

"Usually it is the unso-called girls, uncertain of themselves in the competitive game, who drift into dating older men. The well-poled, self-assured girl dares undertake the considerably more formidable chore of cultivating rapport with marriage-minded men in her own age bracket."

So why don't these fortytish males undertake to cultivate rapport with marriageable females in their own age bracket? Who do they think they are? Ponce de Leon, boy forever?

A.P. An irreparable element of immaturity in these fortytish males, that impels them to fall back perennially to the debauche age girls, in quest of ego income, or the illusion of eternal springtime. — M.H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Can you tell me of a place where I can get an unmarriageable girl who is to have her baby? I don't place that admits only colored girls, then a place that is interested. I would like to know, also, how to get in touch with the home, the rates, fees, location, etc. Thank you.—G.B.

DEAR G.B.: The Salvation Army's Service to Unmarried

The central or mid-west territory address is 860 North Dearborn Street, Chicago 9, Ill. Telephone: Superior 7-1430.

The southern territory address is Salvation Army Home and Hospital, 212 South Alton Avenue Road, P.O. Box 29, Durham, North Carolina; telephone 3-2760.

For further details, communicate directly by mail or telephone with the foregoing sources.—M.H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am going with a boy who I love dearly and whom I may marry some day. There is only one obstacle: a difference in religion. I am a Christian and he believes in the apostle. I think, though he isn't a member.

I love my religion and don't plan to leave it, so I am going to explain to him how I feel about this? I wouldn't want to have anything. What should I do? Please answer soon.—L.L.

Dear L.L.: Paraphrasing the table, I think you are counting your troubles before they are hatched. It may be that this lad never will ask to marry you; in which case, you'll have no cause to labor the topic of the difference in religious belief or religion us.

However ever, should the day come that you and he are seriously considering marriage, then of course you must, in honor, do the performance of a film about your feelings and intentions as regards your faith and practice.

If you would tacitly deceive him on that score, now or later, to keep from offending him, or fear of losing him, then your alleged belief is counterfeit.

If you are really concerned to think straight, and deeply, about the implications of interfaith marriage, read "The Marriage of Two Faiths" (Ronald Press), written by James D. Bosward and Eleanor Stoker Bell.—M.H.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Fields This Morning Were White Frosted

So the fields of this morning were white frosted. Tabbly pickled her steps daintily when she homing along the orchard from some outing which had taken her beyond the limits of the city. She was not there for her kit-cats. And "Oh dear" she was signing, we expect to see those frosts back again!

But when the sun strengthened and the dew dried, the other countryside was then.

John Kenneth Galbraith whose interesting and dryly humorous book, "The Scotch" we have been reading, recalled in it how impressive the autumn colors were. It is a story of his youthful days on the farm in Ontario—in the district north of Lake Erie—where he was born and reared. And to which he returned in 1911, when he made a sentimental journey—a pilgrimage back to revisit. A man of many talents, it is said that he was once in doubt as to whether to be a professional economist, a writer, a teacher, a practitioner, or a public servant so he did all recently a Professor of Economics at Harvard.

"He lives with his wife and three sons in Cambridge in winter, and in the summer in southern Vermont, where his study looks out on maples, and meadows, and the Green Mountains." He is the author of several books that have been "admirably rewarded with readers."

He recalls that as a lad "When we went back to school in September, the leaves were already turning; soon the schoolyard was encircled by a lower ring bank of crimson, scarlet, and yellow. Sometimes it seemed to take the sunlight itself, and turn it back in colors wonderful to behold. Then the leaves fell away, and so did the horizon; one could now see into the depths of the wood, and to one side of the school to the meadows beyond."

So October will afford us wider horizons and new scenes, here toward the north. "I love October" one visiting us now long ago, smiled in anticipation, "enjoy walking in the summer sun, and in the autumn, when the fallen leaves is a thrill, and how different the color of the ground is at the summer. Here is the decided dip and the rise from the brook, one had a scarcely noticed when the dreary of summer screened them. And how pretty and fascinating the scenes are now from the woods' paths!

By this, the island, wearing one of its prettiest gowns, will have welcomed her Queen. Given her its brightest, warmest greeting, for she is a bonny lady, this woman, whom I always regard with respect and affection. The descendant of a line of Queens, she has inherited the light bearing, the loveliness, the wild o'm, and grace of a smile, which to their subjects have been among our former Queens.

Prince Philip is the well loved Prince charming out of every story, and the farmers are expecting a good crop and are looking forward to a good price as they work the year around in South Lake.

Then As Now... Cheese was a staple at every meal in the days of Canada's pioneers, and in today's modern scheme of good things to eat, stellerino meals and snacks from morning to night. But today's housemaker is now that cheese is a real bargain both in price and in versatility. It's versatile too, since it goes to all the best parties, whether home-cooked or catered. It's versatile too, since it provides squishy-meat-adding to pie-crusting, cheese, to parmesan, cream, cheddar, or like, who, congers all.
