Midsummer Trip, 1888.

Age, with locks so thin and snowy,
Palsied limbs and wearied frame;
Eyes bedimmed and cheeks so furrowed,
Dust to dust, from whence we came.
Life's bright cup and all its pleasures,
Fleeting as the flowers of May,
Vanish like the dews of evening,
All these, too, will pass away.

Youth and beauty, manhood's glory,
Age and all the cares of life;
Each in turn goes like the morning,
And we fall amid the strife.
Hardships great, and storms and tumults,
Earth's vain pleasures 'mid the fray;
All that's bright joins in the chorus,
"Even this will pass away."

Yes, even this! But day is dawning,
And I see the curtain raise;
From afar the light is streaming,
Floating 'mid glad songs of praise.
O, the angels! hear them singing
In that land of endless day,
Songs of joy with harps of triumph,
"NOTHING HERE WILL PASS AWAY."

(For The Examiner.) Even This Will Pass Away.

REV. W. K. BURR, M. A., PH. D.

Lovely childhood now reclining, Safely on its mother's breast,
Free from cares, and laughing, prattling, Then again is lulled to rest.
But the shores of life are shifting,
Changing quietly each day;
A little voice floats o'er life's billows,
"Even this will pass away."

Blooming youth, all bright and joyous, Strains of melody and song;
Bounding boyhood, merry girlhood,
Full of hope, their joys prolong.
But life's bark is seaward drifting,
And a voice is heard to say,
Gentle as the evening zephyr,
"Even this will pass away."

Manhood—strong and sturdy manhood, Battling with the storms of earth;
Tired hands, feet worn and weary, Tinged with sorrow, mixed with mirth;
Nobility glory, still resplendent, Streaming from the land so gay, While Hope cries, with pluming pinions,
"Even this will pass away."

Age, with locks so thin and snowy,
Palsied limbs and wearied frame;
Eyes bedimmed and cheeks so furrowed,
Dust to dust, from whence we came.
Life's bright cup and all its pleasures,
Fleeting as the flowers of May,
Vanish like the dews of evening,
All these, too, will pass away.

Youth and beauty, manhood's glory,
Age and all the cares of life;
Each in turn goes like the morning,
And we fall amid the strife.
Hardships great, and storms and tumults,
Earth's vain pleasures 'mid the fray;
All that's bright joins in the chorus,
"Even this will pass away."

Yes, even this! But day is dawning,
And I see the curtain raise;
From afar the light is streaming,
Floating 'mid glad songs of praise.
O, the angels! hear them singing
In that land of endless day,
Songs of joy with harps of triumph,
"NOTHING HERE WILL PASS AWAY."

THE memory of Pitt has been assailed, times innumerable, often justly, often unjustly; but it has suffered much less from his assailants than from his eulogists. For during many years, his name was the rallying cry of a class of men with whom, at one of those terrible conjunctures which confounded all ordinary distinctions, he was accidentally and temporarily connected, but to whom, or almost all great questions of principle, he was diametrically opposed. The haters of parliamentary reform called themselves Pittites, not choosing to remember that Pitt made three motions for parliamentary reform, and that, though he thought that such a reform could not safely be made while the passions excited by the French revolution were raging, he never uttered a word indicating that he should not be prepared at a more convenient season to bring the question forward a fourth time. The toast of Protestant ascendancy was drunk on Pitt's birthday by a lot of Pittites who could not but be aware that Pitt had resigned his office because he could not carry Catholic emancipation. The defenders of the Test Act called themselves Pittites, though they could not be ignorant that Pitt had laid before George the Third unanswerable reasons for abolishing the Test Act. The enemies of Free Trade called themselves Pittites, though Pitt was far more deeply imbued with the doctrines of Adam Smith than either Fox or Gray. The way negro drivers invoked the name of Pitt, whose eloquence was never more conspicuously displayed than when he spoke of the wrongs of the negro. This mythical Pitt, who resembles the genuine Pitt as little as the Charlemagne of Ariosto resembles the Charlemagne of Equinhard, has had his day. History will vindicate the real man from calumny disguised under the semblance of adulation, and will exhibit him as what he was, a minister of great talents, honest intentions, and liberal opinions, pre-eminently qualified, intellectually and morally, for the part of a parliamentary leader and capable of administering with prudence and moderation the government of a prosperous and tranquil country; but unequal to surprising and terrible emergencies, and liable, in such emergencies, to err grievously, both on the side of weakness and on the side of violence.—Macaulay.

SIR ROBERT PEEL.
Sir Robert Peel was firmly attached to the Anglican Church, but he wished the State to promote education among all sects, and that not merely of a secular kind.
He believed "that such an education was only half an education, but with the most important half neglected." He was urgent in pleading for education among Roman Catholics, and for its encouragement by the State. He voted and spoke in favor of the admission of Jews into Parliament, and while he professed a deep conviction of the truth of Christianity, he maintained also that "as a Legislature we have no authority to determine religious error, and no commission to punish it." He never could resign the hope of improving the condition of Ireland.—I. C. Earle's English Premiers.

THE BIBLE.
I never will be a party to any scheme that attempts to lay down in an Act of Parliament this monstrous, arrogant and dictatorial doctrine: that a parish or community shall not, if it please, introduce the Bible into its schools.—Richard Cobden.

Not only as the spiritual corrective of all vicious reading, but as the highest of histories, the truest of philosophies, and the most eloquent utterances of human organs, the Bible should be read for the young and by the young at all convenient seasons.— T. D. McGee, Montreal, 1867.

FORGIVENESS AND FORGETFULNESS.
In the course of my long life I have learned two wise things—one is to forgive much; the other is never to forget.— Guizot.

A little of forgetfulness does not injure the sincerity of the forgiveness.—Thiers.
I have learned in my life to forget much, and to make myself much forgiving.—Bismark.

The above sentiments were written in the autograph album of Count Eugenberg, formerly Resident of Hesse at Paris, by the above-named statesmen, each following the other as above copied.

IMPORTANCE OF NEWSPAPERS.
A newspaper can drop the same thought into a thousand minds at the same moment.
A newspaper is an adviser who does not require to be sought, but who comes to you briefly every day of common weal, without distracting your own affairs. Newspapers, therefore, become more necessary in proportion as men become more equal and individuals more to be feared. To suppose that they serve only to protect freedom would be to diminish their importance; they maintain civilization.—De Tocqueville.
