Once owner and operator of the finest farm property in this vicinity, he retired from farming thirty years ago and moved to the city. Mr. Davison visited the old harbor and along the shore line where he reports he hauled seaweed by the hundreds of loads year after year in his farming days. Long before fertilizer was ever dreamed of, he farmed on a big scale then, mixed farming, good horses, good cattle, and hard work, he says. He also visited the old school at the harbor where he was educated. Mr. Davison called on many of his old friends, visiting the Bristol Post Office to chat with Mrs. Sinnott, and McEwen's old store.

There was no guest speaker as a good deal of business in planning for the year's work was in the mind of the executive.
