Two Can Sing

by James M. Cals
CHAPTER ELEVEN

Part One

I quit kidding myself then. I knew I'd give anything to have it back what I had pulled at the party that afternoon. It wasn't brave, it wasn't big, it wasn't just plain silly. I had made a jackass of myself and put something terrible between me and Doris. I began thinking of her, then, and knew that it didn't make any difference what she had done to me, or anything else. I wanted her so bad it was just a terrible ache wanted her worse than ever. And here I was; I had no wife, I had no home, I had no kids, I had no work, I didn't even have Cecil. I had just made a mess of my life. I think I hit an all-time low that night. I never felt worse. I could not.

The next day I took a suite at a hotel in the fifties. I took it by the month. I didn't hear anything from Doris. I began reading the society pages after a couple of days, and she was in. Every time I saw her name I saw Leighton's.

On the singing. I never opened my trap. One day a guy showed up at the office by the name of Horn. He kept looking around kind of puzzled at the drafting-room, and in a minute I asked him pretty sharp what he wanted.

"You're Mr. Borland? Mr. Leonard Borland?"

"Yes, I'm Leonard Borland." "I'm looking for the Leonard Borland who sang with the American Scala Opera Company under the name of Logan Bennett. Anyway, I hear he did."

"Where did you hear that?" "I heard it from a friend of mine, Giuseppe Rossi."

"Well? What of it?" "He knew then he had the right guy, and kept looking me over. 'I'll tell you what of it. I'm connected with this new outfit that's giving opera over at the Maxwin Theater, and—"

"Not interested." "I need a baritone." "Still not interested."

"If you're as good as he says you are, I could make you a pretty nice proposition. I could offer you $125 a night say with three appearances a week guaranteed. That's a little more than Rossi was paying you, isn't it?"

"Yeah, quite a little." "Well—will you think it over?" "No."

"I got a couple of good tenors and another one coming. I got a couple of sopranos. I think are comers. But in opera you've got to have one good baritone before you've got a show."

"All right, then, I'll come up a little. How about $150?" "Maybe you didn't understand what I said when you came in here. I appreciate what you say, I'm grateful to Rossi, but I'm just not interested."

The idea of singing made me sick. He went, and I put on my outdoor sport, about that time. That was walking around the opera house hoping I'd see Cecil. A couple of days after that I did see her. I raced back to the office as fast as I could get there and put in a call for her at her hotel. She said she wasn't in. I knew she wouldn't be. That was why I had been watching. I left word that Mr. Borland called then for a week I stuck at my desk, hoping she would call me back. She never did.

All that, what I've just been telling you, was in the last part of November. When the first of December came it crossed my mind it was funny no bills had been forwarded to me. On the third I found out why. When I came downstairs in the morning and crossed the lobby the clerk called me, and he had my check in his hand, the one I had given him for my next month's room rent. It had bounced back. I blinked at it, and I knew they were hadn't been any bills. Doris was paying her own bills. The money was in a joint account, in her name and mine, and she had drawn every cent of it out, started an account somewhere else, and there I was.

What became of the man I married?

Wise provider, faithful husband, good father—yet many a husband deprives his wife of the one thing she wants most: love.

In My Reader's Digest, Marjorie Holmes tells why a woman needs love; why not getting it is often the reason she nags, wastes money, loses her looks; and why many a husband may mistakenly believe his wife is "cold."

Read what men should realize (but seldom do) about women's attitude toward love and sex. Get your My Reader's Digest today: 41 articles of lasting interest, condensed from leading magazines, current books.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
