

BREAK INTO THE JOURNALISM RACKET!

It's the Big Time. Your chance to break into hard-core journalism. Maybe the only chance you'll ever have. Beat the degree-gathering rat race. Forget those books, off the Kelly library, tell your prof that you've seen the light, thumb your nose at those $500 a month departmental secretaries who flash by in the boss's Cadillac and look at your scuffy shoes when you ask if your March exam is ready to be returned.

What we mean is join the CADRE staff. As long as you're at U.P.E.I. getting an education you might as well learn a trade.

We need reporters (lots of 'em); people interested in learning to do typesetting and layout and reviewers.

We've got a whole hell of a lot of expensive electronic machinery just waiting for more people to learn how to use it.

If you're interested contact any member of the CADRE staff or drop into our office in the basement of Memorial Hall. Members of the U.P.E.I. Conservative Club and other right-wing deviationists need not apply.

IRISH TORTURED

An American sociologist who has just returned from Northern Ireland has charged that the British appointed government there is intentionally hooking the citizens of Northern Ireland on sedatives and downers. Rona Fields of Clarke University reports that 90% of the citizens of Belfast and Derry are presently taking sedatives and sleeping pills - many of them addicting - handed out by government agencies. She reports that her three-month study convinced her that the White-law (British) government is using the sedative strategy to subdue the resistance and spirit of the people deprivation" chamber. This is a room which is completely covered with white tiles and totally soundproofed, where lighting, temperature, and odors are kept absolutely constant. She said that prisoners, tied up in uncomfortable positions, are placed in the chambers for up to five days. With no changes in their environment in these chambers. They usually lose track of space and time, and commonly begin to hallucinate. Some of the hallucinations will continue up to a year after a person is set free. Fields says that suspects as young as 13 years old are placed in these chambers to force them to talk.

Fields also reports instances of the use of terror, psychological torture, and overcrowding in Belfast jails. She said that many political prisoners are being kept in virtual cages, and that the space provided men in some prisons is so limited that rats, if confined to spaces in the same proportion to their size as these, will begin to eat each other.

Fields said that one of the most common forms of torture used to force suspects to talk is what is called a "sensory

For the Latest in Women's Fashions

See Us

The Fashion Shoppe

University Ave., Ch'town

10% Discount to Students.

You be sure to be having a good St. Paddy's Day

CANADIAN IMPERIAL BANK OF COMMERCE

K-MART PLAZA