THE CHILDREN OF NERO

By Gabble Ratchet

The flames were all around him
Not consuming
Not purifying
They were all-red and pain.

He went into shock.
He got burned.
"You got burned," they said.
He went into an amoral numb, an amoral peace.

He was in shock.

No flames crept into his sleep
No flames sneaked under his door.

But soon the light of the flames of the sun
Stroked his eyes and he awoke.
He awoke without fear
For himself
For his world
Both blistered from heat.

His scarred hands stroked the whisk-broom from
His singed neck to his quiet genitals,
Flicking away the loose cinders
And settled ashes.

The clean-up was well underway when he smelt the smoke.
It came off the street into his little alley.
He felt the glow of the flames and remembered.
He became enamoured and afraid.
