

MODELS "BLUENOSE"

Joseph MacDonald of Borden, who has built more than 100 ship models, is seen examining a model of the famous "Bluenose" which he has just completed in over 300 hours of exacting work. The model is built to scale, 1/4 inch equalling 1 foot, and the completed model is 3 feet long, 6 inches in beam, and is 43 inches in height. Of pine construction, the model, whose sails can easily be raised and lowered, is complete in every detail, and the anchor chains assembled from copper welding wire, were made by Mr. MacDonald, a bridge operator with the C.N.R. at Borden.

Wardrobe Of Executives Is Well Stocked

NEW YORK (AP)—The young men who get to the top of the business world in a hurry seem to be a dressy lot. Replies from 140 of the young presidents of American corporations also suggest that they took time enough on their way up to shop for clothes, and that they still match the articles carefully before setting off each morning for the executive suite.

sports coats, with the top number 15, and figure that one-fourth of their entire wardrobe is in the sports category. The majority never wear sports clothes to business, although 14 of them do occasionally. Three-fourths of them think a chest pocket handkerchief a must for proper dress. The majority own a tuxedo. One man has 50 sets of links and studs to choose from. On average they own seven sets of male jewelry. One president makes do with just one pair of pajamas—another needs 20—and the average is 5.8 pairs.

Now the company, which completely fitted out the frigate, is at work breaking her up in the Blith yard. Lt. - Cmdr. M. T. Beardmore of Canadian joint staff headquarters in London visited the yard in July to watch the progress of dismantling.

London Meets A Crime Wave

LONDON (AP)—An increase in crime has exploded the Londoner's boast of living in the world's most law-abiding city. A police report just published discloses a 14-per-cent increase last year in robberies, assaults with intent to rob, burglaries, rape and the like. A quarter of those arrested for violent crimes were under 21. Scotland Yard's chief, John Nott-Bower, says: "It is no consolation that the trend is national, not confined to London." A policeman of 20 years' experience said: "I always used to tell householders never to be afraid of burglars—but not nowadays. The person who breaks into a house is likely to be some half-hysterical teen-ager. If he's disturbed, he might hit out at an old woman, pull a knife or do anything. "You don't know where you are with them." To visitors London may give the impression of a decadent, sinful city because of widespread prostitution. Police call the prostitution problem a hopeless headache. There is no particular law against it. Magistrates fine them and let them return to the streets. But the big headache is the increase in crimes of violence.

Sages Are Far From Being Dull

By ED SIMON
Canadian Press Staff Writer
LONDON (CP)—Tucked away in a recent issue of The New Statesman was a one-paragraph letter congratulating A. I. Laing on his 70th birthday. One of the lesser-known great men of his time, Laing will be readily recognized by his coterie of admirers as one of the first writers in history to define a wage-freeze in pidgin English: "Wages long time no up no down." A contemporary sage, J. A. Lindon, tackled the same problem: "You work alee same you no get more him buy less." Laing and Lindon are members of the select group who monopolize the prize lists in the weekly competitions run by The New Statesman and The Spectator. Week in, week out, their versatile achievements in poetry and prose are the joy and despair of the amateur competitor seeking a cut of the comparatively meagre prize money. They are equally adept in translating nursery rhymes into scientific jargon ("oscillate, infant, on summit arboreous") and translating French classical poetry with professional skill. Both magazines, despite varying editorial beliefs, encourage an irreverent attitude toward politics. G. J. Blundell, another hardy perennial, collected two guineas from The Spectator for a Lewis Carroll parody called "Alice in the House of Commons": SHARP PUNS "Why is it," asked Alice, "that the speaker does so little speaking' "For the same reason as the Whips do so little whipping," replied the death-watch beetle . . . Occasionally the competitions take an uplifting moral tone. The Statesman awarded an approving two guineas to a poem in praise of non-alcoholism: "Then come with me and we'll abstain"

"Where chlorinated waters bubble. "Together at the kitchen main "We'll see life whole and see it plain "And never, never see it double."
