Foreign Aid To Co-ops To Be Discussed

SUMMERSIDE — Kenneth MacLean, 68, president of the Prince Edward Island Co-operative Union, told The Guardian last night that Dr. Alexander Laidlaw, Ottawa, national secretary of the Canadian Co-operative Union (CCU) will be principal speaker at an open meeting to be held Tuesday at Prince of Wales College, Charlottetown, to discuss a new program to be called, "Co-operative Everywhere."

Mr. MacLean explained that the Co-op of Canada has had in the past what was called a "foreign aid" program, but the new project, although basically the same, will go under a new title. The program centres around the provision of foreign aid for under-developed countries. The program will be devoted to raising money by co-op people to be used exclusively for these countries. Mr. MacLean said last night that he expected the first foreign country co-op would be assisting under the new title would be Ecuador, in South America.

"The money will go towards helping a project or program already initiated and underway in foreign countries," stated Mr. MacLean.

"In this way we can get more miles per dollar collected because less is required for administration. Many countries are faced with the problem of lack of money to continue current programs. It is the opinion of co-op people all across Canada that the time is past when we can sit in our parlours and forget about the rest of the world if we consider that every night two thirds of the world's people go to bed hungry."

Mr. MacLean stated that there is a large class of poverty-stricken people in foreign countries and "this can only last long without trouble."

He also said that he thought this would be the first time in Canada that anything concrete would be done to promote "Co-operative Everywhere." One method of raising funds, he said, would be via coin cards.

Dr. Laidlaw, who will address the meeting, has two years of practical experience in foreign aid under the Colombo Plan in India.

Disarmament

are more than $70,000,000—Canada's contribution being $6,240,000.

But this is only temporary relief since the Soviet bloc and many other countries claim they are not liable for peace-keeping costs of the UN force in the Congo and the UN Emergency Force in the Middle East.

Canada will strive for strong acceptance by the assembly of an international Court of Justice which will allow UN members to be bound by law for peace-keeping operations on the same basis as for the regular UN budget.

Delegates must decide whether the UN can go on pouring $100,000,000 a month into the Congo in the face of a deficit amounting to $100,000,000 because France, South Africa and some other countries besides the Soviet bloc refuse to pay assessed shares.

DISCUSS NEW GUINEA
After the formal opening, the assembly is expected to debate for perhaps two days the agreement under which West New Guinea will be transferred from The Netherlands to Indonesia.

Then will begin a general policy debate in which spokesmen
