

The Russian Famine

DESCRIPTION OF THE SCENES IN THE FAMISHED DISTRICTS.

An English special correspondent, who is travelling in the famine districts of Russia, writes from Saratov that scenes of violence in the valley of the Volga are of frequent occurrence. Clergymen's houses have been robbed, and the bodies of murdered men are found on the high roads. The correspondent was warned of the danger of travelling out the country, and he seldom, drove at night. Caravans of merchandise are escorted by an armed force. The correspondent says that while he was sleighing on the Volga one evening he was tracked for half an hour by a ragged looking peasant armed with a musket and cut-throat. It was his intention to signal the approach of the correspondent to an ambush prepared by robbers, who intend both sides of the Volga. The correspondent showed his revolver and the peasant retreated. The correspondent adds that villages in the government of Samara, which were prosperous in 1886, are now plunged into the deepest misery and the population has been decimated. In one village 2,765 of its 8,567 inhabitants have emigrated. Of those remaining about 1,239 are dependent upon charity. In three months the people of the village have lost 4,035 head of live stock. They are indebted to the state in the sum of 72,380 roubles. The same conditions prevail in other villages. Forty thousand acres of land are idle in the province of Samara, owing to a lack of seed with which to plant this area. A large number of the German colonists live in hovels in earth for warmth. They eat bread made of wild hemp, and the carcasses of horses. This diet causes severe and often fatal nausea. The famine is changing the peasants into wild beasts. In one case a man attempted to hang his daughter because she had not been successful in begging. A loaf of bread was given to a peasant, who began to devour it with the avidity of a famished wolf. While he was in the act of gulping down the bread he fell in a fit. Speaking of the resources of the country, the correspondent says that the land in the basin of the Volga is exhausted and the climate is changing. He suggests that 100,000 of the German colonists be assisted to emigrate to Canada and the United States. They are a fine race, he says, and would make successful colonists in those countries.
