The Constantinople correspondent of the London Daily Mail hears that the porte has decided to decline the payment of all claims for indemnity for massacres except those advanced by Americans.

Violent gales have occurred along the coast, with several casualties at Brighton. The Chain pier there has been destroyed, and the shore is strewn with wreckage. There were exciting scenes at Dover in connection with the storm. The Ostend packet found itself unable to make the harbor and notified those on shore by the firing of rockets. Another vessel is supposed to have gone ashore east of Dover.

The London Graphic has a despatch from Sebastopol containing a description of the military preparations in the Caucasus for the expected invasion by Russian forces of Armenia. The despatch says that foreign tourists are not allowed to traverse the military roads, no matter what passports they may possess.

THE TRAGEDY AT DUNDAS.

A Woman Fatally Hacked With an Axe.

Her Murderer a Maniac—Particulars of the Terrible Affair.

Margaret Mackenzie, about fifty-five years of age, was brutally hacked with an axe at Dundas on Saturday last, and died from her injuries yesterday afternoon. Her slayer, a young man named Archibald Macgowan, is insane, and was last evening brought to the city and placed in the Hospital for the Insane. Miss Mackenzie was housekeeper for Duncan and Jonathan Matheson, living at Dundas. Macgowan is a son of the late John Macgowan of Dundas. Last summer young Macgowan was sunstruck, but there did not seem to be anything very notice able in his demeanor excepting that when in the house he seemed melancholy and morose. But this feeling seemed to wear off when he was in company.

It is stated that on Friday evening Macgowan attended a meeting of the Good Templars Lodge, where he acted in the capacity of sentinel. On Saturday morning he complained of a severe pain in the head. Subsequently he began to talk incoherently, and spoke of getting a bicycle and going to Boston and South Africa. Leaving home he went to John K. McLean's grocery at Albion Cross, about a mile distant. Mr. McLean noticed that there was something the matter with Macgowan, and asked him what it was. Macgowan did not answer, and left the store immediately. John K. McLean and James Morrison left the store shortly after Macgowan, and followed in the direction he had taken as they did not think he was in a fit state to be at large. Hugh McLean, a neighbor of Macgowan's, at the request of Mrs. Macgowan, also set out after the young man. Matheson's house was about twenty chains from McLean's store. The men were not close enough after Macgowan to see him enter the house, which is near the road, but they saw him when he reappeared. Hugh McLean arrived at the place about the same time.

Macgowan, who was swinging an axe which he had procured at Mathesons' house, angrily demanded of the men what they were following him for, and told them to mind their own business and leave him alone. Hugh McLean said they were looking for sheep, whereupon Macgowan, dropping the axe, said there were thousands of them there on the road. As soon as Macgowan dropped the axe it was seized by Hugh McLean, who held it over Macgowan's head as if he was going to strike him. This hostile act had the effect of frightening Macgowan, and he returned quietly to his own home with McLean.

John K. McLean and Morrison then called at Mathesons'. They did not know the Matheson men were away and never suspected that anything was wrong at the house. They found the door open and when they stepped inside a horrible sight met their gaze. Margaret Mackenzie, the housekeeper, lay on the floor with a large gash on her head and another on her neck. The blood was flowing freely, and there were several pools of the liquid on the floor. A few faint moans could be heard escaping from her lips. They promptly gave the alarm, and Drs. Donahoe and Nicholson were summoned, who dressed the wounds and did all in their power for the sufferer. The cut on the right side of the neck was found to be about an inch and a half deep, and extended to within about a quarter of an inch of the jugular. The cut on the head was circular in shape, and was just above the right ear. The hacking character of the wounds is thought to have been the result of battle offered the woman's assailant by a dog which was in the house, and which followed Macgowan when he left the house and did not return until eleven o'clock that night. On Sunday afternoon when the wounds were being dressed the same dog stationed itself outside the window and with its paws upon the sill peered in and seemed to take the liveliest interest in what was being done.

Miss Mackenzie did not recover sufficiently from her injuries to give any information regarding the trouble. Once or twice she moaned as if in pain, but no other sound escaped her lips. It is thought by some that when Macgowan entered the house and attacked her she set the dog upon him to protect herself. But of course this is all supposition.

Macgowan remained at home on Saturday night, sleeping well except for a slight restlessness. On Sunday morning he arose and dressed himself, but declined breakfast complaining that his stomach was bad. Not long afterwards he began to act very excitedly, and he was arrested by constables Archibald Currie and John R. Campbell and lodged in Georgetown jail. That night he did not rest any, and became very violent. He was examined by Dr. Stewart and pronounced insane. Last evening the same constables brought Macgowan to Charlottetown. He was very violent, and it was necessary to strap his feet besides handcuffing him. He presented a sad picture indeed.

Macgowan's father has been dead six or seven years. Besides his mother he has four sisters, three of whom are in the United States, and three brothers. Macgowan is about twenty years of age.

Miss Mackenzie belonged to the Head of Cardigan, and had been with the Mathesons' as housekeeper for about two years. She had just finished scrubbing the house when she was attacked. The nearest neighbors say that about the time the attack was made upon Miss Mackenzie, they heard some loud talking and also noticed the furious barking of a dog. But they did not suspect anything wrong, and thought no more of the circumstance until they heard of the terrible butchery.

The body of Miss Mackenzie was to be interred at Dundas today. An inquest is being held.

Word comes from the Hospital for the Insane that Macgowan is very quiet today.
