Steel Workers Re-elect President

PITTSBURGH (AP)—David J. McDonald has been re-elected President of the United Steelworkers, the union announced Friday. Tellers reporting on the official ballot count said it showed he received 494,172 votes to 223,516 for Donald Rarick, his opponent who started his campaign on a protest against a dues increase. Rarick, a 38-year-old steelworker in McKeesport, Pa., was an unknown at the time the dues protest drive began after the USW's 1956 convention voted a $2 monthly increase in payments by the membership. McDonald, 54, has been associated with the union since its founding. He worked closely with the late president Philip Murray

BEDTIME STORIES

Welcome Robin Is Excited

Excitement gives to life the spice That ends all dullness in a trice. —Welcome Robin

Presently he pulled another worm out through that roof.

Welcome Robin and Mrs. Welcome were in Farmer Brown's dooryard. They had just discovered that just below where they were perched in a small tree and a little way out from the ground was moving. Yes, air, it was doing just that. They were watching it. There was no doubt at all that it was moving.

Now ground does not move of itself. Certainly not. How could it? If it really moves something or someone would move it. It was so now. Someone was pushing it. He was pushing it up from below. Welcome and Mrs. Welcome Robin knew who was doing it. It was Miner the Mole.

Miner was digging a tunnel. He was digging it just under the roots of the grass. As he dug along he pushed the ground, grass roots and all, up a little so that he could move back and forth easily in his tunnel. His tunnel had sort of a rounded roof raised above the level of the ground.

The two Robins watched that tunnel grow longer and longer. The ground would be pushed up for a very little way then stop moving for a few minutes. Presently it would begin to move again. They knew what Miner was digging that tunnel for. He was after worms, the long, smooth, fat worms that boys use for bait when they go fishing, and that Robins so dearly love to eat. They are just as fond of them as fishes are.

"I wonder if he is getting a lot of worms," would like a few myself," said Mrs. Welcome.

A moment later Welcome robin became excited. He flew down to the ground right close to the rounded roof of that tunnel. He hopped up on it. His sharp eyes had seen something appear in a tiny hole in that roof and he had known it for just what it was, the head end of a worm. Just as he started to fly down it had disappeared and sand had rolled into the tiny hole, filling it up.

Welcome Robin hopped close to it. He cocked his head to one side to listen at that tiny hole. For just an instant he listened, then turned and stuck his bill straight down where that tiny hole had been. He braced himself and pulled up and back.

"Have you got a worm?" cried Mrs. Welcome.

Welcome couldn't say a word. He couldn't talk with something in his mouth. No one ever should try to talk with something in his mouth. Instead of trying to Welcome Robin braced back and pulled hard. He waited an instant and pulled again. Little by little a long worm was pulled out through the roof of Miner's tunnel. As soon as it was wholly out Welcome Robin swallowed that worm.

Welcome became excited. He ran along on the roof of that tunnel, stopping every few steps to put his head close to the ground and listen. Presently he pulled another worm out through that roof. He became more excited than ever.

"My dear, do you know what I think?" he cried.

"How should I know what you think?" asked Mrs. Welcome not too pleasantly. She wanted a worm too.

"I think those worms I just caught were trying to escape through the roof from Miner the Mole. That is what I think."

The bidding: North East South West 1 Pass 2 Pass 2 Pass 3 Pass 4 NT Pass 5 Pass 6 Pass

Opening lead—queen of hearts. A Chicago reader sends this hand which is labelled "a good exercise in the logic of dummy play." We subscribe fully to his sentiments and the line of play chosen by declarer which succeeded in making the club slam.

The bidding was also first rate. North pushed the hand to a slam once South showed additional values by bidding three clubs.

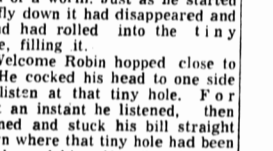

Declarer won the heart lead and saw at once that the slam was in the bag provided it did not turn out there were two diamond losers. All other suits seemed to take care of themselves.

The same result is obtained if it turns out West is the player who dealt four diamonds to the king. After the jack holds and a low diamond is returned West also must throw in the sponge. There is no escape either way.

So long as declarer doesn't cash holds he is on solid ground. And West also must throw in the sponge. There is no escape either way of course, his timing in the early part of the hand must be exact, or his mission will fail.

Icebreaker Awaits Change in Wind

CORNER BROOK, Nfld. (CP) The transport department's icebreaker N.B. McLean was reported waiting Wednesday for a change in wind directions to escort the freighter Fort Avalon through Arctic ice packs in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

The icebreaker is scheduled to rendezvous with the Margaret Bowater south of the Port au Port peninsula and guide the freighter north through the ice to the mouth of the Bay of Islands.

The Fort Avalon is bound for Philadelphia with 2,400 tons of newspaper produced by Bowaters Newfoundland Pulp and Paper Mills Ltd. The Margaret Bowater is en route here from Port aux Basques on the southwest Newfoundland coast to pick up a newsprint cargo.

Commanded by Capt. Melville Storrer, the Margaret Bowater returned to Fort aux Basques Monday after waiting for more than a week for ice to clear off the peninsula. The Fort Avalon has been berthed here since April 6.

Meanwhile, department of transport reported the icebreaker d'Iberville has left the vicinity of d'Iberville Tuesday, retreating the McLean after freeing her from ice near Port Saunders on the northwest coast, where both vessels had gone to aid icebound sealing ships.
