for him — men who are everlastingly dining at other men's houses, should not be tolerated a single day longer—the race of men that record their grievances and furnish explanations in the newspapers, should be expelled society—Parliament did a very unwise thing in reducing the salary of the Chaplain of the British Legation in Paris—Austria is in a very disorderly state — the Hungarians are getting far too much of their own will, and if Baron Buest sees his way out of his difficulties, it is more than Cornelius O'Dowd does. Mr. Dickens, when he was a good deal younger than he is now, saw fit to make the public his confidant regarding certain domestic troubles which had befallen him. Week after week the narrative continued, the public paying all the while for its perusal. Mr. O'Dowd seems anxious to copy this example—nineteen pages of Blackwood are taken up with the enumeration of things that trouble and annoy him. The public very soon got tired of Mr. Dickens' confidential vein, so it will of Mr. O'Dowd's.

The political article is a review of the Session. One after one its acts come up before the writer, like the ghosts before the tent of King Richard, and each appears to address the British Constitution with the same doleful burden: "Let me sit heavy on thy soul." Two, what are called obvious, conclusions are drawn: "first, that a more unscrupulous, and therefore dangerous House of Commons than the present never came together; and next, that if legislation go on for a session or two more in the spirit which characterised the session just ended, the oldest may live long enough to see the last of the greatness and prosperity of the country." For those who counsel an immediate separation of the North American Colonies from the Mother Country, here is an argument they never dreamed of, ready-made to their hands. The writer becomes in the end completely overwhelmed by the magnitude of the disaster which he sees overhanging his country, and exclaims: "What are old constitutional Whigs about? What are the best and noblest of the Tories doing? Is it impossible to form out of these a party which shall say, both to Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli * * * we will act with neither of you, if you refuse to take your stand somewhere; we will act with either, if he will only enter into an obligation to stem the tide of revolutionary change which is sweeping us we know not whither?" So the old grudge is out at length. We have long heard it whispered that the Tory party bore with reluctance the leadership of Mr. Disraeli. He was among them, but not of them. Will Lord Stanley take the direction of this dimly foreshadowed coalition betwixt the old Whigs and the Tories? In any such movement to dethrone him, Mr. Disraeli has every chance of acting, not unwarrantably, the part of the old man of the sea.

"Good Health" will be noticed in our next.

THE STORM.

The storm so accurately prognosticated arrived true to its time; its effects so inaccurately detailed, have not arrived as yet. To use a mercantile phrase, we duly received the invoice, but only a portion of the articles have, up to date, come to hand. We have all been a great deal more frightened than hurt. Other parts of the world may have suffered from the portents foretold by Lieut Saxby, Prince Edward Island has only to complain, so far as we are informed, of the overthrow of some "stacks of hay and grain." Every preparation was made to give the "tidal wave" a becoming reception, but from its non-appearance, it is gravely suspected that it has been lost at sea. Had Lieut. Saxby confined himself to the announcement that on a certain date violent gales might be expected from the South-west, he would have spared some nervous people much anxiety,—would have been nearer to the truth, and would not have shaken public confidence in his skill as a meteorologist.

In another column we give the full particulars, as far as we can learn, of the effects of the Storm in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

THE CONCERT GIVEN BY THE PUPILS OF THE CONVENT DE NOTRE DAME.

We have had the pleasure of assisting at many Concerts given here, and have on several occasions either given original notices of them, or copied from our contemporaries, and notwithstanding that one Concert of the kind seems so much like another, the rapid improvement of the young ladies who discoursed such eloquent music last Thursday evening, to a somewhat slim audience, gives us a field for fresh encomiums each time we hear them. Notwithstanding, however, the many excellent morceaux, both Vocal and Instrumental, which they gave us in so charming a manner, conducted and so ably generalled, as it were, by the very talented lady who teaches them, we must crave the indulgence of the young ladies on this occasion, for we are quite sure they will see that all the space we can spare should be devoted to what we consider the feature of the evening's entertainment, namely, the address so admirably made by Professor Caven. Indeed, we anticipated that the lecture would be entertaining and instructive, but few were prepared to hear such a lecture as was delivered by that gentlemen. We will proceed to give the outlines of Professor Caven's lecture, which we hope may prove to be the first only of many more. Our readers, however, will bear in mind that we can give them but a very inadequate idea of the address from memory. The subjects treated by the Professor were principally: The great influence exercised by music over the passions and the feelings—its employment in giving expression to these.—The great masters who have cultivated the art — their writings —The German and Italian School—characteristics of both.—Sacred music—Oratorios.—Great spread of the cultivation of music.—Choral Societies—their number in Britain, and other interesting and instructive statistics of the art. Time or space will not permit a detailed review of the lecture, but the Professor entered, with the proficiency of the true connaisseur, into the characteristics of each of the composers named. Professor Caven took up very zealously the accusation sometimes brought against German composers, calling their music deficient in melody. The Italians are known to excel in melody, hence Rossini's reputed witticism in inviting a friend to dinner who had praised some person's music that he, Rossini, considered void of melody, and helping that friend to sauce without fish, saying that "Sauce without fish ought to suffice a man who was satisfied with music without melody." We entirely agree with the Professor in his statement, that it is unjust to say that German compositions are deficient in melody. He gave the names of several works, which are but a few amongst the many, giving flat contradiction to such an assertion. It is because the German school of music is so replete with delicious harmony that the melody in a German composition may appear a secondary thought at first, but it is soon detected by an artistic ear, and is only for a few bars, perhaps, lost sight of, just as a ray of golden sunlight may disappear, momentarily, behind a feathery, silver cloud, to re-appear clothed in greater glory. It has been said by Mr. J. W. Davison (husband to the celebrated pianiste Madame Arabella Goddard) that we should rather compare Mendelssohn's "Songs without words" to flowers, than gems, for "The breath of God expands the rose into bloom, but the cut and polished diamond is the handiwork of His creatures." Such melody as that which haunted Mendelssohn when he composed these pianoforte songs, must have come, like all true inspiration, from above. We noticed one important feature (the greatest proof of artistic proficiency) in Professor Caven's lecture—it was a mere trifle—unnoticed, perhaps, by many, yet it stamped him in our eyes as a true artist. In alluding to the fact that two of our greatest musicians were not on friendly terms, he refrained from falling into an error, which nine lecturers out of ten would have fallen into while on such a delicate ground, that is: for the sake of affording an audience the momentary gratification of hearing the reputed failing of musicians publicly exposed, they would have sacrificed the feelings of those musicians present, by making some such remarks as the following: "but musicians are proverbially known to be seldom on friendly terms." Professor Caven proved himself a thorough musician in the omission of this somewhat tempting opportunity afforded him, for he knew well that most TRUE musicians are free from all these petty jealousies. It is but your "job carpenter" who sees so readily the faults of a superior workman. It is well known that our greatest musicians have been for the most part truest of all artists in their warm and undying friendships, for amongst true lovers of true music there is a sort of musical Freemasonry. The Great Paggannini is said to have conceived an extraordinary admiration for Mozart, even when quite young and with tears in his eyes, is said to have exclaimed to a youthful companion: "See what a wretched bungler I am compared with him!"

Before concluding we deem it but right to make a few observations on the Institution in which our daughters are being rapidly made ornaments, not only to their sex, but to any society. Some one (we really forget who) advocates all accomplishments in a young lady's education as being supposed to increase her chances of a prize in the matrimonial lottery. As accomplishments are objects of universal admiration, this may be partially true, but we must claim for the sex a higher aim, and often these very accomplishments become a means of support in misfortune. It is, therefore, plain to be seen that a Convent School gives educational advantages which no other school or seminary can give, because each and every branch has its own representative and teacher, who is always a lady in every sense of the word, the refinement and dignity of whose manner in every day life is such that the pupils gradually become educated, not only in the several branches, but in manner, gaining by daily intercourse with ladies of the Convent that grace and ladylike quietude of deportment that stamps them as gentlewomen. As in the regular army there is a something about the British soldier that tells you plainly he is a soldier—even should he not be in uniform, so there is also a something in the carriage and manner of a girl who has been educated in a Convent that tells you so. We have, we trust, made our peace with the young ladies alluded to, for want of space to devote to their very charming selections given on Thursday evening.

In conclusion, we have but to regret that there were not more present to listen to the Professor's most interesting lecture and fine singing, and to express a hope that he will e'er long favor us with another such treat.

MATRIMONIAL.

The Matrimonial Market is brisk just now. Last week we chronicled the fate of the Messrs. McIntyre. This week we have to deplore the loss from the list of Benedicts, of Mr. George O'Neill, who was wedded on Monday morning last, in the presence of a large and fashionable assemblage, to Miss Mary McKenna, daughter of Mr. John A. McKenna, of this city. The Rev. Jas. A. McKenna, brother of the bride, was the officiating clergyman. After a sumptuous breakfast, to which a few special friends were invited, the happy pair started for the "Half Way House," Vernon River, which is, for the future, to be their home, and which, under their superintendence, will, we have no doubt, be quite as attractive as in its palmiest days.—Her.

Melancholy Accident.—Early on the morn of Tuesday the 5th inst., as some of the workmen were going to work at the shipyard of Mr. James Keefe, at Rollo Bay, they saw the body of a man lying on the side of the road at the foot of Mr. Daniel McRae's Hill. On examination it was found to be the body of a person by the name of Donald McDonald, of Dundas, who was returning from Souris on a truck the evening before. An inquest was held before W. H Williams, one of the coroners for King's County. The body presented a most ghastly appearance, and from the evidence of Dr. E. B. Muttart, who was sent for, and who held a post mortem examination, it appeared the unfortunate man had fallen from the truck and dislocated his neck, causing instant death. It was supposed the body had became entangled with the truck and dragged some distance. The horse and truck was found standing early in the morning of the 5th inst., at Mr. Joseph Webster's gate, a short distance from the body. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."—Com.

Many valuable horses die from the effects of colic. The best thing to do in a case of this kind, is to pour a bottle of "Johnson's Anodyne Liniment" into a long necked junk bottle, add half a pint of molasses and water, then pour the whole down the horse's throat. In ten minutes the horse will begin to eat.

"Parson's Purgative Pills" will greatly relieve, if not entirely cure, dyspepsia, when everything else fails. They have been tried in some desperate cases, and have given more relief than any other medicine.

The Halifax "Express" says:—"A sharp customer named George Riley is now under arrest, charged with obtaining a quantity of goods from Mr. H. P. Burton, under false pretences."

The George Riley mentioned in the above paragraph, played some of his tricks off in this city last winter, and when he found the Police on his track decamped. We trust the Halifax authorities will put him through.

We are requested to state that the Judges of Horses, Cattle, &c, at the Fair on Tuesday next, will commence their duties at 11 o'clock sharp. It will therefore be necessary for all competitors to have their Stock on the Holland Grove ground before that hour.

The Judges in the Exhibition department of Agriculture and Local Industry will begin their work at the Drill Shed at 9 o clock on Wednesday morning, after which hour nothing can be admitted for exhibition.—Pat.

☞ We have received the report of the proceedings of the City Council, but owing to the want of space we are obliged to let it stand over till next week.

The Steamer Alhambra, which arrived on Thursday morning, brought over from Boston the remains of the late Mrs. Bremner, which were deposited in the Protestant Cemetery of this City at 4 o'clock the same day. A large number of our citizens testified their respect for the deceased by attending her funeral.—Pat.
