

Princess Margaret's Farmer Escort Stirs Growing Interest

By KEN MATHERAL
Canadian Press Staff Writer
LONDON (CP) — A handsome and wealthy county squire is causing a ripple of excitement among British newspaper columnists always alert for signs of a royal romance.

The squire is Christopher Lewis Loyd, 33-year-old Berkshire farmer who has been seen escorting Princess Margaret with increasing frequency this year.

Both the 26-year-old princess and Loyd were guests of the Duke of Beaufort at the recent Badminton horse show and they spent much of their time laughing and chatting together. The Evening News says "there is no doubt in the mind of anyone who has seen them there that Mr. Loyd has become one of Princess Margaret's very close friends."

NOT IN WHO'S WHO
Loyd, who isn't listed in Who's Who, first came into the public eye last June when he escorted the Queen's sister at Ascot for three days running. He hit the society columns again at the beginning of the year when he was a guest of the Windsor Castle as a member of the Royal Family.

Since then he has dined with Margaret and her friends a number of times and escorted the princess to the Old Berkshire Hunt point-to-point races in April. On Easter Monday the princess visited Betterton House, Loyd's country mansion at Lockinge, where the bachelor farmer owns more than 10,000 acres of Berkshire's richest farmland. While there, he saw work progressing on a £5,000 ballroom-and-banqueting hall that Loyd is adding to his home. A number of other rooms at Betterton House are being redesigned and enlarged.

ETON, CAMBRIDGE, GUARDS
A graduate of Eton and Cambridge, Loyd was a captain in the Coldstream Guards during the Second World War and won the Military Cross. He has dark hair and his lips curl down at the corners, giving him a scowling appearance when his face is in repose. A six-footer, he towers over the petite princess.

Loyd lives with his mother at Lockinge and the villagers and workers on his estate speak highly of him. Last year he took them all on a trip to the Russian circus when it visited London.

Some observers believe Loyd is replacing Billy Wallace as Princess Margaret's favorite escort for more than ten years. Wallace probably acquired the princess to more parties than anyone else and the dogged devotion of the 28-year-old man about town has earned him the title "old faithful."

Wallace was the first man to escort Princess Margaret to a dinner party after she publicly renounced her love for Group Captain Peter Townsend in 1953 because of her sense of duty to church and country.

EDWARD JOSEPH McCABE

On June 1, 1933, "Husky" Edward Joseph McCabe, Arts, was born in Charlottetown. He received his primary education in Iona and there he developed that enthusiasm which was to stand by him throughout his studies.

He entered St. Dunstan's in 1948 and having completed his High School, he attended Prince of Wales and was then engaged in the teaching profession for one year.

After an absence of three years, he returned to St. Dunstan's to advance his education in the field of Arts. During his college life at S.D.U., "Husky" has held several important positions and actively took part in campus activities.

As a Freshman he was a member of the Dramatics Society; in his Sophomore year he was hockey manager and a member of the executive of the Amateur Athletic Association; during his junior year he was assistant canteen manager and the canteen, a much expanded and enhanced unit during his years of service. Husky also has merited his commission in the Royal Canadian Army Service Corp.

His generous and kindly personality, together with that spirit of "Ambition has no risk," which we have known at St. Dunstan's, will no doubt carry him on to success.

JAMES ARNOLD MULLIN

Charlottetown was a quiet and peaceful city until, in the wee hours of December 7, 1935, a bundle of energy in the form of James Arnold Mullin arrived on the scene. Arnold, because of his aggressiveness in his early youth, picked up the name of "Kayo."

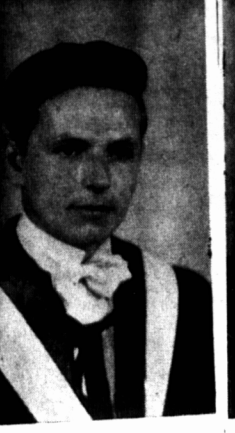

He attended Queen's Square School before coming to Grade XI at St. Dunstan's in the fall of '51. While here he has proven himself to be a diligent and persevering student, and a versatile athlete endowed with a fiery spirit.

"Kayo" was a valuable member of our Varsity hockey and football teams and had the distinction of playing on the 1954 team which won the Maritime Intercollegiate and Senior Championships.

During his sojourn here he was elected President of the A.A.A. and captain of our hockey and football teams. "Kayo" also participated in intramural basketball and softball, displaying in these his characteristic drive and determination. He has also earned his commission in the Army through his service in the R.O.T.P.

"Kayo" plans to make his career with the Royal Canadian Army, and has been posted to the Second Battalion Black Watch at Aldershot. We can rest assured that in his future he will display his usual proficiency and Christian zeal.

ELLIOTT L. MCAULAY

James Elliott L. McAulay, Arts was born in Charlottetown on May 13, 1934, and is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Louis McAulay. He entered Saint Dunstan's in the fall of '51 after graduating from Queen's Square School that same year. Upon reception of his junior matriculation, Elliott registered, as a freshman student, in the faculty of Arts.

As a non-resident student he braved the well-known snowdrifts, blizzards, and roads to faithfully attend lectures — that is almost deserving of a degree in itself! During his sophomore year he was a member of the cast of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" staged in the Spring of '53 by the College Dramatics Society.

Elliott has an admirable character with a quiet, sincere concern for his fellowmen and a well-developed sense of humor. Since coming to Saint Dunstan's he has been noted as a diligent student, a pleasant companion, and a Christian and sportsman who has won many friends. He has been an asset to our campus and we, his friends, wish him every success in whatever he may choose to do.

GEORGE J. MULLALLY

On July 25, 1935 the home of George Mullally, Souris West, was graced by the arrival of an infant who was to be called George Joseph.

George Jr. received the first years of his primary education at the local school. Later he attended Souris High School from where his academic achievements merited him the Governor General's medal. George joined the inmates of this institution well prepared to pursue further his education.

During his stay here George has shown a keen interest both in studies and in extra-curricular activities. In the former he proceeded with favorable success but in the latter he was outstanding which is evidenced by the numerous executive positions which he was called on to accept.

For two years George was chosen by his classmates to represent them on the Students' Union executive. While in college he capably executed the duties of rink manager, stage manager for the Dramatic Society, chairman of N.F.C.U.S., and vice-President of the Students' Union. This year in recognition of George's ability to lead and willingness to work, the student body elected him as President of the Students' Union. The efficient manner in which he carried out these varied duties earned for him the honor of being elected life-president of his class.

In addition he is a member of the U.R.T.P. (Air Force Reserve) and a First Aid Instructor.

George intends to take up pharmacy as a career. To a gentleman who gave himself without reserve to all activities with a spirit that was as earnest as it was loyal we bid "bonne chance" knowing full well that he will always bear the stamp of S.D.U. with honor.

Above 48,000 Feet A Pilot Uses "Reversed Breathing"

This is one of a series dealing with human problems arising from the development of new high-speed, high altitude aircraft for the RCAF.

By DAVE McINTOSH
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP) — Above 48,000 feet, without cabin pressurization, a pilot must learn "reversed breathing" with artificial pressure if he is to remain conscious.

Above 63,000 feet, again without cabin pressurization, the water in his body would boil if he did not wear protective equipment.

At much higher altitudes, he would be subject to cosmic radiation and his aircraft would be bombarded by small meteors.

The RCAF now is up against these problems—and overcoming them—as it enters the age of supersonic flight. Its 1,600-mile-an-hour CF-105 Arrow jet interceptor will be test-flown for the first time this year. It probably will have an altitude capability of more than 63,000 feet.

EMERGENCY PROTECTION
The higher one climbs, the greater the reduction in atmospheric pressure. Therefore artificial pressure must be built up around the airman to keep his body functioning.

This is done in the first place, of course, by cabin pressurization. The pressure is kept the same above 10,000 feet (a human can live comfortably at this altitude) as if the plane remained at that height.

But the air force can't rely on the supposition that cabin pressurization will never fail. It must have an emergency system to protect aircrew in event of pressurization failure.

This emergency system is represented in the first place by a partial pressure suit. This is where "reversed breathing" comes into play. Normally, a person exhales muscles in breathing in while exhalation is purely passive.

At high altitude, the oxygen must be delivered to the airman's lungs under pressure.

Suppose, then, a pilot is receiving oxygen under pressure. He does not have to exert any muscles to inhale. But he must exert them to exhale, the reverse of the normal physiological procedure.

And he must receive help to do this. A special suit exerts counter-pressure on the chest wall to enable the pilot to exhale.

In case of cabin pressurization failure, this suit would keep the pilot conscious for at least 10 minutes, ample time for him to descend to a safe altitude for normal breathing.

But the RCAF wants something better than this and its institute of aviation medicine is working on special garments to protect aircrew. The goal is a suit good enough for space travel.

These garments may be uncomfortably hot and the pilot will have to be cooled by dry air pumped from the engines. Even so, the pilot may perspire nearly four quarts of water in a single mission.

Construction of a full pressure suit to encase the airman from head to toe has raised complex problems because no machine has ever been invented with the flexibility and dexterity of the human joints.

The suit must be made flexible so that when inflated—this would be done automatically in event of cabin pressurization failure—it would not strangle a man like a rag doll. As nearly as possible, the joints in the suit must approximate the joints of the human body.

Macmillan Sends An Interim Reply To Bulganin's Letter

By WALTER DAVIS
LONDON (Reuters) — Prime Minister Macmillan announced Tuesday he has sent an interim reply to Soviet Premier Bulganin's April 20 letter urging closer Anglo-Russian relations.

Macmillan told the House of Commons he informed Bulganin the letter raises "a large number of important issues" and will require careful study before he sends a full reply.

Bulganin had proposed increased trade and cultural exchanges, a worldwide ban on nuclear tests and a big-power agreement to renounce use of force in the Middle East.

Labor party members tried in vain to determine whether Macmillan, as reported in some British newspapers, is contemplating a trip to Moscow. The prime minister said only that such visits "need careful preparation and careful timing" to be effective.

NO DETAIL ON VISIT
He said he had nothing to add to his reply in February to a Soviet invitation to visit Moscow. At that time, he said he would let Bulganin know when "it seemed possible" to fix a date.

The day before Easter, Soviet Ambassador Jacob Malik delivered the unexpected letter from Bulganin calling for a return of the friendly Anglo-Soviet relations that prevailed before the Hungarian revolution and the Anglo-French attack on Egypt.

Macmillan told the Commons that his interim reply said: "I wish to thank you for the message you sent to me through Mr. Malik on April 20, and fully appreciate the care which you have given to the study of all these questions and the interest you show in improving relations between our two countries."

"Your letter raises a large number of important issues and I am sure you will agree that the points you make will require careful study."

"When I have had time to examine them more fully, I hope to send you a further reply."

TEST BAN URGED
Several Labor members pressed Macmillan to seek in his exchanges with Bulganin at least a temporary halt in nuclear tests.

The prime minister replied that, together with the other Western powers, he will continue to work for a comprehensive disarmament agreement, including the abolition of nuclear tests.
