ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

And now only, after that week of enchantment, known near and far as Old Home Week on The Island, is past, we are satisfied to pick up the rested thread of our daily round on this farm and continue again in measured orderly ways our schedule of duties. A bit uneven was this thread spun of late, thin in places, we fancy, and not what we should choose to display as a fair sample of our housewifely art. Hurried were our chores which in recent days were in truth not our absorbing interest but only incidental to that of the Fair in the city.

What a hustle and bustle, a coming and going it gave on this—and many other farms, we are sure! What an early securing of gates to pastures and paddocks, so that while the place was unattended no pasturing animal could gain its freedom to stray out of bounds! And sometimes a considerable distance on our way thither, James would be sure to find some chink in our armor of complacency with a remark like: "There now, Ellen—I clean forgot to close that stable-door! If the cows should chance to get in the yard 'till a mealie there would be!" But Rob had remembered... and again all was well.

Was ever Fair better? Or Week more swiftly passing than this one which with unmistakable siren-call drew young and older within the gates of the Grounds? Children who declared the next morning they "just never remembered getting into bed last night!" Grown-ups too, even those usually blasé whose entertainment is offered, hear the education along agricultural lines, having been steeped and dyed in its practical workings ever since time was.

Drew? ay—and held; and released briefly, to recall again over August field and copse... It was so easy to be coaxed, so natural this week of all to follow the line of least resistance; to choose to do only what would not brook postponement at home, to hang up aprons, don a clean dress, hear James' reminder to "See that the fire's out; Ellen—and the stove drafts closed!" and be off then with the rest to the Fair... with lads who in no time knew where to find the most spectacular

Fresh Flowers

Add a couple of aspirin tablets or a pinch of soda to the water in which cut flowers are to be put. Either will keep the flowers fresh longer than will plain water.

Old Shirts

Make use of the tails of old shirts by making shoe bags, laundry bags, or bags for holding dust cloths, and when these have become worn, they can be used as dusting cloths.

Salty Soup

If the soup is too salty, add two or three pinches of brown sugar to it. This will remove the salty taste, but will not sweeten the soup.

The bride, given in marriage by Mr. Gerald McCaughey, wore a wedding gown of white tulle with a Chinese collar. Imported French lace formed the bodice and sleeves and an insert in the skirt, which fell into a cathedral train and her long circular veil was held by a beaded coronet. Her bouquet was of stephanotis with baby orchids.

The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. J. M. Goodwin, of Vancouver, B. C., as matron of honour, Mrs. L. Y. MacInnis and Mrs. C. E. Johnston, both from Prince Edward Island, and also sisters of the bride, Miss Rosemary Mace, Montreal, and Miss Gretchen Peller, sister of the groom, as junior bridesmaid. The attendants' gowns were fashioned of periwinkle blue taffeta with net. Chantilly lace over sandal-overskirts and yoke in princess style. They carried colonial bouquets of verberna with Goldlocks roses. The junior bridesmaid's bouquet was of Goldlocks roses.

The groomsmen were Dr. Francis Rogers, of Cleveland, Ohio, and the ushers were Dr. W. Walsh, Dr. W. Paul, and Mr. Robert Gray, all of Toronto.

The reception was held at the Hamilton Golf and Country Club. The groom's mother chose a long jacketed dress of ginger toned nylon taffeta, designed with a full sweeping skirt and fitted bodice with a halter neckline which was covered by a long dolman sleeve bolero. The high folding collar was scalloped, and she wore a matching hat with small sweeping brim. She carried a small matching bag to which a hybrid orchid was pinned.

For travelling the bride wore a water-blue corded silk suit with matching hat, tan accessories and an orchid corsage. Dr. and Mrs. Peller will reside in Toronto.

The Stars Say - -

By Genevieve Kemble

For Tomorrow THE augury is for a particularly inviting and active week end, with much to excite and perhaps thrill. And while instincts and desires are on pleasure bent, there are signs of these being overdone, with excitement and a yen for aggressive action culminating in rash or regrettable expression, possibly inciting to enmity and reprisal for too ardent behavior. It is possible that there will be opposition or some form of setback from elders. It might be the better part of valor to heed warnings to "take it easy", to conform to rules and regulations.

YOUNGSTERS IN DANGER

Your sincere efforts to maintain your home are commendable, but a separation will certainly be necessary if your husband continues to mistreat the children. Their physical danger is acute, and the mental conflicts that can result when babies of such tender age are abused by their own father are not to be risked. Your husband is apparently a person of extreme possessiveness, and has been lured by the fact that three small children take up most of your time and attention, leaving him with somewhat less than the lion's share—to which he feels he is entitled. A normal husband and father, loving his wife and children, accepts these changes in domestic situations as they come along, realizing that his wife has enough love to cover her entire family. A neurotic mind, such as your husband's, can never accept a situation in which anyone usurps to the least degree the homage to which he has been accustomed.

His temperamental suikness as exhibited by failure to be ready on time, or come to meals when called, have been handled admirably. You could go further along these lines. After waiting a reasonable

That Body Of Yours By James W. Barton, M.D.

THE PROS AND CONS OF REMOVAL OF TONSILS

While physicians are not sure as to the need of the appendix in the body, there is no question about the use of tonsils in the body until the teen age (by that time the children's diseases—measles, diphtheria, scarlet fever and others—are not likely to occur). The tonsils are considered filters of the blood and can actually tackle invading organisms and ward off infection.

In the British Medical Journal, Dr. A. H. Gale (University of Bristol) reviews the pros and cons of tonsillectomy. The decision as to whether the removal of tonsils is necessary is not an easy one and opinions regarding this question differ widely. There are, however, several recommendations which seem to be generally accepted.

Tonsils should rarely be removed before age of five. Adenoids should be removed at any age if they are causing obstruction of the nose and of the eustachian tube, which carries air to the inner side of the eardrum to enable the drum to vibrate and permit proper hearing. Tonsillectomy should not be performed on a child who has never had symptoms, whatever the appearance of the tonsils. However, tonsillectomy should be performed after several attacks of tonsillitis associated with fever.

"Tonsils should be removed at a suitable interval after peritonsillar abscess, in rare instances in which the tonsils are so large as to cause mechanical obstruction, and from chronic diphtheria carriers when other means of treatment have failed," writes Dr. Gale.

When it has been decided that, because of the presence of the streptococcus organisms and because attacks of rheumatism have occurred, the removal of the tonsils is necessary, the operation should be done only when the throat disease has been quiet for several months, under full penicillin protection.

Despite the controversy as to the relation of tonsillectomy to the bulbar type of poliomyelitis, "while poliomyelitis is present tonsillectomy should be postponed or performed only under urgent circumstances such as attacks of rheumatism and rheumatic fever."

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday it is are likely to be carried away by their energy, ardor and enthusiasm into dangers, disturbance and regrets. The aggressive urge to be up and doing, while encouraged and approved by the younger element in the home, social or romantic contacts, is possibly discouraged and thwarted by elders, or possibly old institutions. The only safe and sane course is to be found in steering clear of all dangers, quarrels, and hectic encounters.

Day After Tomorrow

The horoscope holds auguries of a fairly lively and stirring day. The astral forces are with the young, ardent and adventurous, with much success and high gear, but, as well, with a hint of an occurrence or adventure that may be deceptive, misleading and "out of bounds." A strange contact or experience may test or challenge the integrity and worthiness of motives and right conduct.

If It Is Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it is are under a strange influence with an intriguing series of experiences and contacts in store. These may be in the realm of the novel, fantastic, with little "rhyme or reason." Peculiar enticements may lure and lead to unpredictable and unprofitable involvements, sinister and perilous. Queer experiences of an emotional sort ensue. Shun strangers, tricksters and "sharpies," as loss of assets or peace of mind or character lie in ambush for the innocent or unwary. A child born on this day, while versatile, ambitious and enthusiastic, is likely to be victimized by its own notions, innocence or infantile proclivities.
