There were Golden Wedding Bells for many in the Maritime Provinces within the past year. Among these, tribute was paid to the President Emeritus of Acadia University and Mrs. Patterson. Both are well known and esteemed in our Island Province. Appropriate at this time is a stanza from a poem written by another Academician Dr. William L. Bailey, graduate of Queens University and for many years a lecturer at North Western University at Evanston, Illinois. While the poem was written for personal friends of Mr. Bailey, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Stewart, Charlottetown on the occasion of their fiftieth wedding anniversary, yet it can also convey congratulations to Dr. and Mrs. Patterson.

Golden Wedding

The marriage vows still hold:
Love grows not less,
We've long been closely bound.
We've found through all the chance and strain of life,
A meeting-ground — a golden medium of exchange.
We have no real difference to confess,
And of the golden coins our souls posses
We'd squander every penny in the pound
To buy yet just such peace as wraps us round
And now shall fill our days.

ELLEN'S DIARY

by an Island Farmer's Wife

Today the winter-sun jewelled with rare loveliness the frosty snow, so beautiful still where the glow of the night-lights touch it about. Not long ago, coat thrown about shoulders, we hurried to the house-corner to check the recording on the thermometer that hangs there. Frosty? Aye. But just how cold? In the mildness of the weather that has been, we have almost forgotten how to reckon its severity.

As it is now, will house-plants in the kitchen nip should the fire burn low? The geraniums, Jeanie mothered for us during our absence at Rob's, budded now in rich promise—the ferns, companions of ours on the visit, sending up their fresh "spring" shoots . . . Will water-pipes catch? And what of the roots stored in the barns' cellars? And the water-bowls in colder corners of the buildings about? A score of such items of "survival" comes to mind on this farm, as the silver thread of the mercury drops and a rime etches opaquely the panes.

This was a week which held the countryside about in a more wintry grip, one remindful of stern-faced winters of old—with "dat ole crunch" of frost back to footfalls and passing sleighrunners, wtih crisp sunlight, and cold silver moonlight and the distant stars sparkling . . . and always the smoke of the hearth-fires billowing upward from the chimneys; reaching up frostily into the blue. Yet there is no great depths of snow about the yards or fields. Only enough to lie prettily and to keep warm the farmlands beneath that tidy blanket of white.

So another Saturday came to close presently our workaday week . . . to rest the farm-wife's bakings and cleanings over the Sunday to come. At sundown, the farmers, put by the sleighs of their haulings, stabled the horses, hanging we could know, the harness, bridles outermost on the pegs. Only the most necessary choring will be attended to tomorrow, the feeding, the milking and items of bedding.

And now in the cold silver moonlight the winter-week turns to tender it's "Farewell!" More wintry it has been, but on this farm, and as winters go, altogether pleasant. And Island-wide, one in which we lived our lives, prayed our prayers, and practiced often unwittingly the various articles of our creeds.

"This, Ellen, is, well, a part of my creed" one who has done very well for himself in the world and his profession which is not of farm-places, commented with a smile one day, offering us this obviously treasured clipping to read:

"I have to live with my self, and so
I want to be fit for myself to know.
I want to be able as days go by,
Always to look myself in the eye.
I don't want to stand, with the setting sun,
And hate myself for the things I've done.
I want to go out with my head erect;
I want to deserve all men's respect;
And in the struggle for fame and pelf.
I wan' to be able to like myself.
I don't want to look at myself and know
That I'm bluster, bluff and empty show.
I see what others may never see,
I know what others may never know."

Increased Population Big Factor In School Problem

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canada's school population has increased by more than 500,000 pupils since the end of the Second World War and this 25 per cent jump has posed a space problem for education authorities which they are still trying to solve.

Almost every province reports overcrowding in schools despite post-war building that has resulted in many new institutions and extensive additions to the old.

Figures compiled by the Canadian Education Association show an enrolment of 2,121,647 pupils in provincially-controlled schools in June, 1945. The figure in June, 1953, was 2,645,249 and reports from provincial authorities indicate the increase continued through the last school year and into the present.

NO EARLY SOLUTION

Education department officials in British Columbia say they do not expect school space to catch up to pupil population before 1962.

Innovations to improve the situation have included use of church basements and other halls, conversion of gymnasiums and auditoriums to classrooms and, in some parts of Canada, the staggering of school hours.

Despite space shortage, however, efforts are being made to keep classes at manageable levels and the trend is to fewer pupils in a class.

URBAN SCHOOLS JAMMED

This picture of school population and classroom space emerged from a Canadian Press coast-to-coast survey:

Newfoundland: All city schools are overcrowded and have been for the last five years or more. Outport schools generally are not overcrowded.

Prince Edward Island: Schools are overcrowded in Charlottetown, Summerside and Charlottetown Royalty. Elsewhere the situation is not acute.

New Brunswick: In several areas there is overcrowding. Classroom space is at its peak but the increase in students makes it necessary to add classroom in many areas.

STEADY INCREASE

Nova Scotia: While schools are said not to be overcrowded, Nova Scotia is hard-pressed to keep up with increasing enrolment — about 5,000 new pupils every school term. In the last eight or 10 years enrolment has increased to 140,000 from 120,000 and the end of the rise is not in sight.

Quebec schools are overcrowded despite a big post-war building program.

Ontario: There is overcrowding, although 2,100 new classrooms were provided in 1953. The trend is to fewer pupils in classes, down from 50 a teacher to 35 in many schools.

Manitoba: Schools are all filled, some a little squeezed, but the building program has kept up with the need. Some 284 additional classrooms have been built since 1946.

BUSES ARE HELP

Saskatchewan: There is tremendous overcrowding in urban centres at the lower grades level although many more classrooms are being used. The province has been closing down rural schools and more than 8,000 pupils are transported to larger schools by bus.

Alberta: There is some lack of school accommodation in urban centres, particularly in larger cities. However, rather than permit too crowded conditions, school boards usually make use of the double shift program to a limited extent while new accommodation is being provided. The average number of pupils in a class was 27.2 at the end of the war, 28.8 in 1952.

British Columbia: Schools are overcrowded, with approximately 14,000 new students being taken in each year. This year the province guaranteed $26,000,000 in bonds for school construction. The situation is worse than at the end of the war.

Ribbon In Your Hair? Be Sure It's Bright

By ELEANOR ROSS

Hair ribbons are coming back in style. No, not for small fry, but for their seniors, and not only big sister but mother.

So, perhaps, it's time for a course on how to keep hair ribbons bright and colorful. Wash them in warm soapsuds, stretch them flat along the edge of the basin, and scrub each side with a soft brush.

Ribbons worn at the hair, or at the neck, pick up hair and body oils, as well as cosmetics, and therefore should be washed frequently before stains can "set." Soil is apt to collect where the ribbons are tied. After rinsing, you can wrap ribbons around a hot water pipe to dry, after wiping the pipe well, of course, or they can be spread smoothly along the edge of the bathtub.

Avoid Shine

Since there's usually no wrong or right side to ribbon when it's tied in a bow, better use a press cloth to avoid unattractive shine when you iron them. And see that the iron is just barely warm.

Going Formal

Sooner or later, there comes an invitation to a bang-up party, one where formality is the order of things. And if one doesn't go out often in grand style, there are apt to be hasty expenditures for special items because the accessories don't seem fresh and pretty.

Cleaning Party Shoes

Party shoes can be "dry sudsed" to remove scuff marks and long kid or suede gloves, if they are washable, come out beautifully after a careful according-to-instructions sudsing. Jeweled halters, rhinestone belts, rhinestone costume pieces can be freshened to gleam like new by going over with a toothbrush dipped in soapsuds.

A frothy tulle skirt is lovely, so long as it isn't wilted looking, but that's easily remedied by pressing the frothy material over waxed paper. So a good going over of available accessories should obviate the necessity for investing in doodads that aren't often used

Fastening Racks Down

And now back to the practical with an answer to a question that frequently comes our way and that is how to provide a firm grip for paper towel racks that come loose because screws pull out of the wall cupboard to which they are fastened. This happened to us, and a friend fixed it. The rack was removed and plastic wood pressed firmly into the screw holes, until they were completely filled. The plastic composition was left to harden over night. The next day when the rack was screwed back in place, it was perfectly firm and has held firmly ever since, despite the constant tugging it receives.

The same technique was employed later to fix some wooden drawer pulls that kept coming off because the screws no longer held in the wood, except that we were told to push the drawer pulls back at once, but not to use them until the composition had hardened for 12 hours.

New Washcloth

Our shopping includes a new type washcloth that's grand.

Terry cloth is sewed over a slim oblong of sponge with a matching tape loop with which to hang it to dry. The combination of cloth and sponge is excellent for a really good clean-up session in tub or shower. The contraption would be easy to make too!

LET'S EAT

You'll Get Vitamins Eating Water Cress

By IDA BAILEY ALLEN

The body often has a natural way of making its food wants known. For instance, with February comes a yearning for fresh green foods.

My New England mother always believed this was a natural outcome of the over-heavy winter fare. When "that feeling" came upon her we youngsters were delighted, for it meant we'd be allowed to get on a winter picnic to Swan's ravine to gather water cress from under the ice on the edge of the fast-running brook.

Pulling the Cress

Our sandwiches eaten, and apples munched we'd break the ice, pull up the cress by means of forked sticks, fill the lunch basket with it, and go home redcheeked and triumphant.

Mother would wash the cress carefully and pass a big bowlful along with the Saturday night baked beans. For Sunday supper: she would cut it in inch-lengths to add to the usual Waldorf salad. Monday she would chop the rest and stir it into hot cream of potato soup.

Scientific Reason

Nowadays we know the scientific rreason why it was so refreshing. Water cress contains iron, copper and magnesium to help make blood and calcium needed for building bone, teeth, muscles and nerve tissue. In addition, it is high in vitamins A, B, B and C, all natural "pepper-uppers."

Today, we do not gather water cress from brooks. It is cultivated scientifically, and marketed like other greens and salad plants.

Wash at once after purchasing; shake or drain the leaves until almost dry. Wrap in a polyethelene bag and refrigerate. It keeps fresh for days, a tasty stimulus to jaded appetites.
