A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter XXXIX

John saw Muriel Doran but seldom after Marcia's return. But he could not deny himself entirely, so occasionally would make excuse to look at some dainty or exquisite piece of china he saw in the window so he might go in and talk with her for a few moments.

The extra work Marcia had been so sure he would get had indeed been forthcoming, making her jubilant. It would not secure the chauffeur immediately, but she purred like a contented kitten when John told her he had taken on the extra toil.

"I am working very hard," he had said to Muriel when she commented upon his looks, He was pale, tired looking. "I have extra work that keeps me often late at night, either in the office or at home."

"Are you wise to try to do so much?" she asked. "Does it really pay in the end?"

"No, but it is necessary."

Muriel said no more. Something in his tone prevented. She mistrusted he was not entirely happy but neither of them had ever touched upon the subject.

That night Marcia had an engagement, so John and Muriel had dinner together in the restaurant they knew so well. To John it meant more than a dinner, more than food. It meant companionship understanding. To Muriel it meant more than she had dared to think. She, like John, was drifting. With eyes downcast she seemed to ponder unspoken things, twice failing to answer when John spoke.

When Marcia had first returned and the pleasant companionship with John had been broken off, Muriel missed him. His absence jerked her back into the common places of life. She missed him, and something more, something not so tangible, something vague, a hope. Then she realized she loved him. Every nerve in her throbbed desperately for him, as every nerve in him ached for her, and neither of them gave the feeling name.

Muriel possessed a direct and innocent sincerity. To her came no thought of flirtation, no idea that John could be anything to her. But she was wise enough to realize that as John had a wife it was unfair to herself, to him, to be often together. John also recognized this and a sort of wordless pact existed between them.

"Oh, John! I had a marvellous time tonight!" Marcia declared when she came in about half an hour after he had retired.

"Yes?" sleepily.

"We had our fortunes told, and she said I was to travel, to be rich and do of splendid things." Then after a moment: "I have always known we could be rich if you had spunk enough to demand what belongs to you."

John groaned.

"You are just as smart and sporty than other men I know. And now that you have a good start with all that extra money coming in you must make the most of your opportunities. That was what the fortune-teller said, that some one belonging to me could give me riches and all my heart desired."

"Does your heart desire anything else?"

"Now, John, what a question! I always want you to love me, old dear. I wish you had been there so you could have had your fortune told, too. But you stick at that old office until you make me tired. Other men go out with their wives, but you are everlastingly at your office until you make me tired. Other men go out with their wives, but you are everlastingly at your

"But I have to be when I do extra work."

"Other men earn just as much as you do and are home early."

John suppressed another groan.

"I am giving a dinner next Tuesday. See that you have no engagement that night. I am going to have a ouija board and other things to make it different and interesting".

"I understand that you were to pass up the dinners for a while if I tried to make enough so you could afford a chauffeur." John was now awake.

"Nonsense! One always has to give dinners. Of course, I shan't give such elaborate ones or so many until after I have a chauffeur. But you are so silly about him, so silly to make me wait until you have his wages for six months saved before I hire him."

"If you give the kind of a dinner you gave last time you will set him back about a month. But suit yourself. I am awfully tired, Marcia. Supose we continue this conversation in the morning?"

"I never saw such a man. You never seem to care to visit with me any more. It is only 1 o'clock."

"I have to get up at 6. You can rest in the morning."

"So could you if you would. I heard a man say tonight that it wasn't long hours that counted in business; it was concentration."

John groaned audibly this time.

"That theory is all right for people who aren't driving themselves to squeeze every dollar they can possibly earn out of the hours. But when one takes on work for every moment of the day and most of the night, oh, well, come to bed! I'm going to sleep".

Less Meat if Back And Kidneys Hurt

TAKE A GLASS OF SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS IF BLADDER BOTHERS YOU

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back aches or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy! take a tablespoon in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

Germany Far From Ruined

BERLIN, Oct. 5.—Germany's industrial situation is booming.

Its government finances, however, are in a ruinous condition, with scant prospect of improvement in the near future.

German industry has been gradually but surely coming to the fore since the revolution. Two summers ago everybody, except the far-seeing and those who had no propaganda to turn out, were saying that Germany was "ruined."

But her industrialists have not been idle in the meantime. And the workmen, formerly obsessed with "strike fever," have long since passed the stage where they hope to achieve their ends by strikes on any and all occasinos. In place of this strike fever has come the old pre-war "Arbeitwork— until now Germany has only around 400,000 unemployed.

As a result of the growing reconstruction, Germany is now doing a tremendous business abroad and at home. She is cutting into the South American trade of America and England, due mainly to the fact that her exchange is so depreciated that these countries cannot compete with her.

Stinnes, Krupp and von Haniel have been busy consildating smaller concerns, improving their processes and organizing for a campaign that comprehends securing of a large slice of the world's trade.

Take Krupps, for instance! The world knows Krupps mainly for its guns and munitions, for its "Big Bertha" of wartime. But Krupps, while always employed to a certain extent on warlike work, has ever been a tremendous peace time steel industry. Its products have been known the world over because of the secret processes which made their steel superior. Today, Krupps employs about 99,000 workers, or 18,000 more than before the war. This increase is partly due to the fact that extra shifts must be installed to meet the eight-hour day requirement. But, is also means that Krupps is now on a full peace footing and "going strong." The last vestige of gun manufacture have been swept away. Now, Krupps is a mammoth steel plant, making locomotives, car wheels, freight cars, machinery of various kinds.

Krupps is merely a sample. What is true of the achievement of this concern is true of virtually every line of German industrial endeavor. The only industry suffering a slump is shipbulding. This is dull, owing to the fact that Germany can now buy tonnage cheaper than she can construct it. She has, however, already placed the nucleus of a new commerce fleet upon the seas, and every indication is that within the next fey years she will again have "a place in the sun" as respects ocean carrying.

Germany has talked much of socialization since the revolution, but has done nothing important to achieve it. The great consolidations undertaken by such men as Stinnes and von Haniel are socialistic in the sense of their all-inclusivness, but are quite under private control. These consolidations are so tremendous as to rival the romantic combinations of vast industries in America.

It can truly be said that German industry is flourishing. But, on the other side of the picture, Germany's finances are in a despairing condition. Swamped with debts and reparations, her budget is sick. It is estimated that to meet her debts, including reparations, Germany must raise at least $100,000,000,000 paper marks a year; and must do an export business of 2,000,000,000 to 2,500,000,000 marks more annually than before the war.

The German task is immense. Her industrial leaders, however, are striving to readjust their methods to meet the new requirements. These requirements, aided by bad exchange, are making business for Germany. Her leaders say that, if she is compelled to go to the bitter end with reparations, she will have acquired an industrial technique and ability which will give her a supreme place in teh world's business.

Sage and Sulphur Darkens Gray Hair

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Gloss and Attractiveness

Almost every one knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair, when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago, the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive

SUMMER TIME ENDS

LONDON, Oct., 4.—Summer time in England ends tonight. The movement here was generally popular save with a certain number of agriculturalists and others who have the care of large bodies of children.

No legal provision has been made, however, for continuing the expedient next year. The present rules lapse under the Defence of the Realm Act, and an attempt to introduce legislation to continue the provisions proved fruitless.

Notice to Farmers

Don't Slaughter Thin Hogs

We note a tendency to sell hogs not properly fatted: in fact in very thin, poor condition. This is a serious mistake from the farmers' standpoint, as no matter wherher prices go up or down from present figures, no packer will continue to buy this unfinished, inferior stock. To persist in selling it farmers will ruin the reputation of Island Pork Products, to their own immediate and future loss.

Finish your hogs properly, sell when ready, and you will best serve your own interests, as well as those of the industry in general.
