

Garfield & Odie

ATTENTION P.O.'d STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS OF ALL SORTS!

Exam time is drawing near and everyone seems to be slacking off. I'd advise a good dose of cat-nip or even human-nip for this. You should perk up, after all, this is the most important time of the school year (besides Winter Carnival, of course) and it's about time you glanced at a book or two, even if it's just to see the title so you'll know what courses you're taking!

You've all had to put up with your profs, and although there are many wonderful ones (as wonderful as a prof can be) there are always a few bad apples.

For example, how about the professor who comes to class ten minutes late and then make up for it, then to make up for it, stays an extra ten minutes at the end of class, wasting your break. I'd personally like to shred his briefcase, or better yet, his briefs!

Then there is the professor who writes so small on the blackboard that even the front row needs a telescope to make it out.

Did you ever attend a lecture and feel as though you're at an auction because your prof talks so fast? I was at a lecture once and when I lifted up my paw to ask a question, I suddenly found myself the owner of a six hundred pound heifer!

We know you have a hard job but why not act as human beings (although we're more partial to animals) as well as professors.

Other more serious complaints have to do with exams. When these are held on weekends or at night, a problem sometimes arises for students who have jobs. And then who would sweep the streets of Charlottetown?

To all those inconsiderate professors, Odie and I lift our legs in a salute to you!

RUMOR HATH IT!

- that Andy C. has been charming his way downtown.
- that the boys are on the road again.
- that L.P. hasn't been eating lately.
- that Lynn's Passion Pit is open late on Saturday nights. (for invited guests only.)
- that people settle for matches when they can't make a phone call.
- that Robbie and Pat were "washed" up Saturday night.
- that Denise was in a bad "situation".
- that what he doesn't know won't hurt him (or her). Thank God.
- that M.R. better learn to stick around.
- that the next bus leaves April 17.
- that the barn is catering to wedding parties.
- that Mary can't get no satisfaction, (but keeps on trying).
