FORMER

dian Army in the First World War, Butlin left Toronto with £5 in his pocket to make his fortune in England. His first venture, a hoop-la stall, snowballed into an amusement park in the Lincolnshire resort of Skegness.

He recalled seeing the first version of the "dodge car" at a Toronto fair, bought the rights in Canada and introduced them at his Lincolnshire fairground.

But his sights were on wider horizons. He wanted to provide colorful, cheap, happy holidays for the masses, in a setting something like the permanent lakeside centres he remembered as a boy in Canada. From this, the Butlin Holiday-Camp empire was born.

IMPROVED MORALE

In the Second World War, he was summoned by the late Lord Beaverbrook to improve the morale of the drab hostels then provided for the 50,000 factory girls making vital wartime munitions. Butlin succeeded in levering almost anything he wanted out of the ministry of supply by simply saying: "Lord Beaverbrook wants it."

The new viscounts are Lord John Hope, former undersecretary for the Commonwealth; Sir Roger Makins, chairman of the British atomic energy authority, and William Morgan Fletcher-Vane, a Conservative party junior ex-minister.

The Duke of Devonshire, descendant of a former governor-general of Canada, who now is minister of state for the Commonwealth and colonies, and Peter Nash, minister of state for foreign affairs, were named privy counsellors.

The Queen actually was 38 April 21, but her birthday is officially observed June 13.

Highest award to a woman went to Miss Eileen Youthusband, 62, for public social services. She became a Dame of the Order of the British Empire.

A knight grand cross of the Order of the British Empire went to Sir Arthur Ford, former chairman of the BBC. Reuters financial editor Sydney Gampell received the Order of the British Empire.

The British Empire Medal went to W. H. Aungier, 63, a London bus driver with 41 years service, and to W. Clark, 70, a Scottish blacksmith who makes forestry ploughs for use on difficult hill land.
