The Truth About Tooth Decay

Science has proved that much of the decay that makes cavities is caused by acid-producing bacteria... formed by tiny food particles which remain on the teeth after eating.

To prevent acid-producing bacteria from attacking the teeth, keep your teeth clean by brushing them immediately after meals.

Pepsodent with Irium gives you the greatest cleansing action you can get. Thus the surest way to fight tooth decay is to use Pepsodent immediately after eating. Pepsodent gives you the cleanest teeth and when teeth are cleanest they are safest from decay.

"Yes, Edson, so did I. I felt that something was wrong. But he wanted it. 'You are quite sure about the trial, Edson? What did they say?'"

Well, it's up to the District Attorney, and he says that circumstances being as they are, he won't ask for an indictment. And if Mr. Moreland ain't indicted he won't be tried. You see, people talked about motives or revenge, and all that, because Mr. Moreland had been chasing this fellow Parsons, but any man can do that, just to bring a criminal to justice, and Mr. Moreland wasn't armed. And then they showed that Parsons run his car off the road when he hadn't any further chance of getting away and started to run up the slope.

"You know there's a double curve there, and when the roadster came roaring up the lights were turned square on that slope for just a second and showed Parsons running. That's the way Mr. Moreland says he saw him, and the police had men up there one night trying the trick and it worked just the way he said. He stopped in a hurry and the car upset, but he landed soft and went up the slope after his man.

"He caught sight of Parsons near the top waiting for him, sort of crouching. He guessed maybe Parsons had a gun, but he went for him just the same. Parsons fired three times. One shot went wild and two hit him. And there were just three shots gone from Parsons revolver. Then they grappled and he got the gun, but Parsons gave way a step too far and they both went over the edge and smashed into the old quarry.

"He said he didn't know any thing for a long time, but when he came to it was just coming on daylight and Parsons was dead, lying under him. And it was hours before he had strength enough to climb out of the old quarry. He thought he'd killed Parsons, but two doctors said that what finished him was a fractured skull from landing on an edge of rock and the grip that Mr. Moreland had on his windpipe. And that's all mist."

Edson finished his rapid recital and stiffened again into the dignity of a well-trained chauffeur.

"Thank you, Edson. It was very good of you."

That was all she could say then, and Edson backed out discreetly. He was by no means blind or lacking in understanding.

XXIII

In Mrs. Dickerson's elaborate boudoir Frances Payne sat very much at ease and sweetly criticized the array of a dozen gowns which had been sent for her hostess' inspection.

"You would not like the rose at all, dear. I wonder at Theophile for suggesting such a thing. This green and silver is just your style."

In her heart Mrs. Dickerson, stout and middle-aged, had yearned for the rose gown. But she meekly relinquished it and turned to the green and silver which Frances had commended. It occurred to her that Frances could be a great help to her if she would.

Of this Mrs. Payne was perfectly aware. She knew that she could make herself indispensable to the stout ambitious lady, and just now Mrs. Dickerson was indispensable to her.

She held up a drift of silver gauze and smiled.

"The first evening I met my late friend, Miss Staunton, she wore a gown of green and silver, a charming little thing, but not so distinguished as this. Poor infatuated Bill Dalmier called her the Sea Foam Girl. And to think that I undertook to chaperone that young woman!"

Her laugh was lazily scornful. Mrs. Dickerson looked up with a curiosity ill concealed.

"I don't know anything about her, Frances, except that she was very rude to me in declining the trip up the coast at the very last moment, when I had made up the whole party just because some

YORK AND VICINITY

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Parice and son are spending their holidays in York.

Miss Joyce Churchill of Moncton, N.B., spent the week-end in York, the guest of her girl friend Miss Alice Crockett.

Miss Christine Froud has been accepted as teacher of Pleasant Grove School for the coming year.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Gillispie and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Roper, Brackley, paid a flying visit to York on Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Kamsay Auld and Dr. and Mrs. Benson Auld, West Covehead, paid a short visit to York on Monday evening, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Crockett.

Many friends of Mr. Arthur Johnson are sorry to hear of his being in the hospital with blood poison in his hand. His friends wish him a speedy recovery.

The Annual school meeting of York School was held on June 27. Quite a lot of business was carried on. A new up-to-date school is to be built this summer, the work to be done by Mr. Harold Clements, East Royalty.

Mrs. Will Crockett has resigned as teacher of York School and Miss Nelda Richards has been accepted to take her place as principal. Miss Evelyn Underhay has accepted again for her third term as Primary teacher.

Quite a number of women of the Women's Institute attended the District Convention in Covehead Hall with the Stanhope Institute entertaining this year. A large crowd attended and the Convention was enjoyed by all.

young man wanted to meet her. It placed me in a very awkward position. I was afraid that something unpleasant must have happened to make you leave her so suddenly."

"It was impossible for me to stay longer, I discovered some things about her. One of them is that she doesn't always call herself Staunton. I think there was a secret marriage somewhere—if there was nothing worse. Really I had not intended to speak of it at all, but I know you are discreet."

"Of course!" Mrs. Dickerson nodded eagerly. "But that is simply outrageous! People ought to know, don't you think?"

"Perhaps. But I hate to be involved in a scandal like that. Did you know that she was once poor Miss Endicott's secretary? I have reasons to believe that Miss Harriet had to discharge her, and shortly after that she appeared at the Bluffs as an heiress."

"Speaking of Miss Harriet," Frances suggested adroitly, "do you suppose Jack will stay at the hospital or be taken to Beechwood? It seems a pity to send the poor boy there with only servants to care for him."

Mrs. Dickerson bridled visibly. "Jack will come here, of course! We are the only relatives he has left. I wouldn't think of allowing him to go with servants or strangers. I shall telephone Matthew to make the arrangements at once."

The next morning, eagerly reading the newspaper account of Jack's accident, Gloria came on one little item which blotted out the sunshine from the sky.

"Young Moreland was taken last night to the house of a relative. Mr. Matthew Dickerson of this city, where he will remain until fully recovered."

She looked at it in dismay. How far reaching one little act could be! Useless to try to see Jack at the house of Mrs. Dickerson who had plainly shown her offense over the yachting incident.

She went over to her desk and began to write hurriedly. At least they would let him receive letters as soon as he was better.

Standing under a banner proclaiming "they who will profit by it want war," John Peet, former Berlin bureau chief of Reuters' News Agency of Great Britain, is shown addressing a sidewalk crowd in the Soviet sector of Berlin. Peet recently quit his job and country for asylum in East Germany and has made a place for himself in Gerhardt Eisler's propaganda department. He addresses meetings throughout the Soviet zone, telling why he fled the west.
