Roberts - Green Wedding

Pink and white gladioli formed the setting for a very pretty wedding which took place in Norfolk United Church, Guelph, Ontario, at 4:30 p.m. Saturday, August 30, when Doris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Merrill Green, Kingston, P. E. I., became the bride of Lea, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Roberts, Highfield, P. E. I. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. E. Kenney.

To the strains of wedding music the bride came down the aisle on the arm of her father looking lovely in a street-length gown of gold metallic acetate nylon, with brown accessories, and a bouquet of yellow gladioli. She wore a necklace of pearls, a gift of the groom.

Verna, sister of the bride (Mrs. Heath Crawwell, Winsloe, P. E. I.) as bridesmaid, wore a blue satin street-length gown with navy accessories and carried a bouquet of pink gladioli. She wore a rhinestone necklace, gift of the bride.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss June Kerr, R.N., as maid of honour, who wore a floor-length gown of turquoise taffeta and matching headpiece. Miss Christine Phillips, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and wore a floor-length gown of pink nylon with a flower headpiece. Miss Betty Kerr, sister of the bride, was junior bridesmaid, and wore a floor-length gown of yellow dotted nylon with a flower headpiece. Little Valerie Ranier, carrying a nosegay of mixed roses, wore a mauve taffeta dress with a flower headpiece. The other attendants carried nosegays of mixed roses.

Mrs. Kerr, mother of the bride, wore a gray lace dress with mauve accessories and a corsage of yellow gladioli. Mrs. Phillips, the groom's mother, wore a white dress with black accessories, and a corsage of yellow gladioli.

IN MEMORIAM

JOSEPH FARRELL The residents of Iona and surrounding districts were saddened on Friday, August 23, when they learned that Joseph Farrell had passed away at an early hour on that date. The deceased who was in his 74th year, was in failing health for the past three months but his end came indeed unexpectedly.

A gentleman in every sense of the word, he was an exemplary Christian character and was possessed of a very quiet manner. He had a keen intellect and was a very interesting conversationalist. His passing leaves a great vacancy in the community which he loved so well.

The deceased was a lover of good music and was a violinist of outstanding distinction. Many an evening was spent in his home where he would render endless selections of real old time music to perfection. However, he was known best as the man who held the unique record of having sung morning Mass at St. Michael's Church continuously for the past 43 years. In political life, in the Medical profession or in the teaching profession a term of this duration constitutes a jubilee. The friends of those completing such a term usually have a celebration in their honor. It would be fitting, therefore, to honour those upon completing such a term in the Church for surely it is no small thing for a man to devote 43 years of his life to the service of his Parish for the betterment of his fellowmen. The deceased had rendered his services for the following Parish Priests of Iona:—Rev. John Gaudet, Rev. Matthias Smith, Rev. P. S. Duffy and Rev. C. J. McCarthy.

The late Mr. Farrell was never married and lived alone on the old homestead which was about the first farm settled in Iona well over a hundred years ago. He was the last surviving member of the Farrell family. The funeral, which was very largely attended, was held from the home of William O'Shea on Sunday, August 31, to St. Michael's Church in which the deceased had served so faithfully for so many years. The service at the Church and grave was conducted by Rev. C. J. McCarthy. The pallbearers were:—Maurice O'Shea, James O'Shea, John Rooney, Joseph Mooney, Montague Griffin and James Daly.

The funeral was under the direction of the N. D. MacLean Funeral Home, Charlottetown.

Mossadegh Under Fire From Three Quarters

TEHRAN, Iran Oct. 19 —(AP)—Premier Mohammed Mossadegh drew public attacks from two quarters in Tehran Wednesday and in London the British Government scored him for his conduct in the bitter Anglo-Iranian oil dispute. The British blast accused Mossadegh of forgetting vital British assistance to Iran after the Second World War and of committing acts overstepping the limits of international courtesy. It accompanied impatient rejection of the Premier's latest condition for an oil settlement. The attacks on the home front came from Gen. Fazollah Zahedi, a member of Iran's Senate, and from the outlawed but active Communist (Tudeh) party. Zahedi declared Mossadegh's domestic policies had brought poverty and endangered the security of Iran. He made the charge in denying he has plotted with a foreign power against the state, as charged by the Government Monday.

The Communist Party flailed Mossadegh in an open letter published by the leftist newspaper Naghmesh No. It asserted he had bowed to British and American "imperialism" and had failed to take a "single positive step" to get Iranian oil flowing again.

Phillips-Kerr Wedding

A pretty wedding was solemnized September 13, at 3:30 p.m. in St. John's United Church, Halifax, when Evelyn Kathleen, daughter of Mrs. Kerr, and the late Mr. George Kerr, became the bride of Albert Mervyn Phillips, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Phillips, Harrington, P. E. I. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. W. Braine.

The church was decorated with baskets of gladioli and mixed flowers. Miss Carol Taylor, the soloist, was accompanied by Mr. Donald Forbes at the organ.

The bride, given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Gordon Kerr, of Sydney, N. S., wore a gown of net over white satin with a full skirt of net and insets of lace. Her veil of tulle illusion fell from a coronet of lace and pearls and she carried a shower bouquet of red roses with streamers of rose buds.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss June Kerr, R.N., as maid of honour, who wore a floor-length gown of turquoise taffeta and matching headpiece. Miss Christine Phillips, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and wore a floor-length gown of pink nylon with a flower headpiece. Seasoned Timber

By Dorothy Canfield CHAPTER TWO

The intrusive questions continued, the candid answers followed. "Grandfather died the year I graduated from Normal School. No, he didn't leave us the house. He had put a mortgage on it—bigger than it was really worth. That's what had put me through the Academy and the Normal School. I believe one of the Ashley banks took it over. No, I don't think the bank ever found anybody to buy it. It's a very small house and too far from the valley road to be practical to farm. It's the last one on the old road to the Crandall Pitch."

To Mr. Hulme it was easy to fill in the gaps of his outline, and a good many times after that, when he was holding his newspaper before his eyes he was telling himself the whole story—the little girl who grew up as fast as she could to take care of the house and the younger sister.

After school hours Susan came to the house to listen to the gramophone and, as she grew more familiar to bring a little order into the room where the gramophone stood. Timothy was usually in his office in the Academy building. But sometimes before she left he came back for his late afternoon reading of the newspaper. Once as he started up the stairs she came running down. He could of course have stopped her then and told her what he felt he must say to her about old Mrs. Washburn. But he had been able to think of nothing, as he looked up at her, save the filmy lightness of her hair, lifted and spread out cloudlike by her rapid descent.

"Oh, good evening, Mr. Hulme." "Good evening, Susan." She passed him with a smiling nod. The front door opened and closed. She was gone. Timothy stood silent, halfway up the stairs, his hand on the railing.

On one afternoon the week after this, she herself gave him an excellent opportunity to tell her anything he wished, by appearing in his office at the hour he kept open for consultation with teachers. But she was for the moment so entirely Teacher, and the question she asked engaged his pedagogical attention so instantly that he stepped at once automatically into his professional role of mentor.

"It's about nature study," she said, the quality of her voice announcing that she was out of patience with nature study. "You know the children are supposed to learn fifteen orchid birds that built each one. They can't see what difference it makes. And neither can I. Honestly, isn't it just another list of facts somebody has thought up for them to memorize?"

He turned his head a little to one side, looked down thoughtfully, stroked back his hair with his right hand and said, "Well, of course to learn just the names of things without understanding is foolish. I wonder if—well, see here, suppose one of the children should tell the class that a crow was the bird that built the long oval nest that hangs at the drooping tip of an elm branch? Or that it was an owl?"

"Anybody'd know better than that!" "How so?" She said tartly. "Why, those birds are too heavy. They have to make their nests on a strong branch. And they're so big and strong they can keep themselves away from their eggs without bothering to hang the nest where nobody can get at it."

He tipped back his chair and asked, "How's that for one answer to your question?" She looked at him intently now, following his idea, looked eagerly for a flaw in his reasoning and pounced on it. "Oh but—yes, I see what you mean. But Mr. Hulme, there are lots of birds no bigger than an oriole and no stronger than a robin that build their nests at the tip of a thin branch."
