POLICE CHIEF BEN GALLANT PUTS A STOP TO ALL ANTICS

Georgetown Group Tour; Really Was Quite A Day

By RALPH CAMERON
Shot at by a Mimiash Indian chief, scoldingly admonished by a pretty girl in colonial costume, arrested and manacled by police and finally punished by being put in the stocks. It was quite a day.

The idea of putting up posters advertising the Kings Theatre in Georgetown appealed to the cast as a good one. They are not a superstitious group and paid no attention to the warning "Stop" sign facing them at the start. But they were in for all kinds of trouble.

It all began when Tudi Wiggins and Marc Strauze decided they were going to put up one of the posters on a teepee in the Micmac Indian Village. Chief Red Cliff took violent exception to the desecration of his beloved wigwam and went on the war-path with his six-foot bow and a tomahawk.

Having conquered the invaders something his ancestors failed in doing four centuries ago he displayed the innate hospitality of his race by refusing to make them his prisoners. Instead he took them around his recreated village and even permitted them to enter the sacred Council place as he willingly posed for pictures.

Heading across the Island the troupe managed to stay out of trouble while visiting the Wildlife Park in North Rustico. However, a big board with pictures of various wildflowers suggested the idea to photographer Gene Murphy that he had a couple of Canadian wildflowers with him so he posed Anne Butler and Tudi Wiggins with the board for background.

TO NORTH RUSTICO
Wanting to see a typical East Coast fishing village, the whole group went down to North Rustico where they thought it would be smart to put one of their posters on a lobster boat. However, the majesty of the law was offended when it noticed them piling on board. Prompt action was taken by Police Chief Gallant when they failed to heed his warning and he was forced to handcuff Tudi Wiggins in order to drag her off the boat.

Walter Massey sprang to her defence and tried to haul her back. As a result he found himself under arrest and was immediately sentenced by Chief Gallant to spend time in the old-time stocks at Burlington where they are part of the display of Woodleigh Replicas. For coming to his assistance Marc Strauze suffered a similar fate.

However, when their sentences expired before they did, co-owner of the Replicas, Archie Johnstone, provided the actors and actresses with an especially warm welcome and extended the freedom of the area to them. Tremendously impressed with the hospitality shown them everywhere they went in the province, the cast of the plays Under the Yum Yum Tree and The Marriage Go Round returned to Georgetown to prepare for the evening's performances. Widely known all across Canada as an adjudicator for the Dominion Drama Festival, Walter Massey, one of the principals in both plays, gave as his judicial opinion that "In spite of the troubles we encountered this has been one of the most enjoyable days we have had for years."

Miminigash Moss Plant To Open

ALBERTON — Marjorie Colloids Ltd. new Irish moss plant at Miminigash, a central point in West Prince County's moss industry, is scheduled to officially open on Monday, July 25, for the purchasing of both wet and dry moss.

The erection this spring of the new 3,000 square foot steel structure represents a considerable investment on the part of Marjorie Colloids Ltd. in an effort to stimulate and further promote the Irish Moss industry on Prince Edward Island.

The new plant has a specially designed mechanical drier which is used for drying the wet moss. This drier, the first of its kind in the province, is looked upon as a great convenience which should be of inestimable benefit to the moss harvesters in the entire area as it will enable largest single buyer of moss in this province and the company has been buying here for more than twenty years.

When the moss has been dried in the huge drum where it is tossed about and mingled with a current of hot air, it is deposited in a baler which prepares it for shipping.

The drying of moss is the first step in what is anticipated will lead in a few years to the semi-processing of moss at the plant. It is expected that the plant will employ fifteen or twenty persons when in full operation.

Observation has been made by many local fishermen that the raking of moss beds has stimulated the growth of moss. The explanation seems to be that the large moss plants are removed, smaller ones which may have been struggling for life beneath them have greater opportunity for growth.

ferred to twice in documents on the Viet Nam war.

On one occasion, Canada and India quoted at length from the legal committee's findings in a joint report June 2, 1962, to the Soviet Union and Britain, chairmen of the 1954 Geneva conference.

Poland dissented from the Canada-India report and from the conclusions of the legal committee.

The legal committee was to have submitted a further report and it is this document which remains unpublished.

An informant said major drafting on a final report was done by Canada and India with some participation by Poland but it was never accepted by South Viet Nam in 1961 to support, organize and carry out the commission.

The informant said it was shelved, although it was referred because acceptance would require approval of two of the three commission members. India apparently changed its mind some time after the 1962 report was submitted by Canada and India to the Geneva conference chairmen.

The second time the legal committee's report was referred to was in a 1965 statement by Canada, appended as a minority report to an India-Poland majority report to the Geneva conference chairmen.

The legal committee's findings in 1962 were that there was evidence that in specific instances personnel, arms, munitions and other supplies were sent from North Viet Nam to South Viet Nam in 1961 to support, organize and carry out hostilities against the South Vietnamese army and government.

The legal committee found that the North Vietnamese army allowed the North to be used to incite, encourage and support hostile acts in the South aimed at overthrowing the South Viet Nam government.

These along with other findings were quoted in the 1962 report by Canada and India blaming both North and South Viet Nam for a renewed flareup in 1961 in the fighting.

Poland, which submitted a minority report, blamed the United States. It said South Viet Nam made a military alliance with the U.S. in violation of the Geneva agreement to bolster itself against internal discord.

In 1963, Poland and India submitted a majority report accusing the U.S. and South Viet
