

THE DAILY EXAMINER.

JULY 25, 1894.

THIS SHOULD NOT BE FORGOTTEN.

The Grit papers are endeavoring to catch the votes of those who are ardent Canadians by declaring that Mr. Laurier and Sir Richard Cartwright are filled to overflowing with Canadian sentiment and are only prepared to support a policy that is thoroughly Canadian.

It is plainly to be seen that Sir Richard's idea was that the policy he was advocating would build up Boston. But what would be the effect of the adoption of this policy?

The building up of Boston by giving it Canadian trade would necessarily mean the tearing down of Canadian cities. The Canadian people are in favor of a policy that would be mutually advantageous to both countries; they are not favorable to a policy that would give a monopoly of their trade to the people across the line.

FARMING THE FARMERS.

The Canadian Trade Review, a non-political paper edited by one of the ablest business men in the Dominion, a paper which takes a most comprehensive view of all Canadian questions, says some very severe things respecting the men who are going about among the agriculturists endeavoring to make them dissatisfied with their lot.

The plain English of a great deal being said about the terrible oppression under which the farmers are said to groan, in this: the writers are simply trying to be good country riders in order to influence their votes. At one time there was an everlasting wail going up about 'the working man.' He was belabored with the manilla, crocodile tears of fussy, but foggy philanthropists, until the self-respect of artisans roused them into protesting against the Government's tyrannical and despotic. He (the minister) would not hesitate to go before any fishing community in the Maritime Provinces and justify the principle of this bill. He had had communications from men on both sides of politics in favour of it, and the only men opposed to it were those who desired to catch votes instead of lobsters, and those who wished to catch lobsters illegally. The honest packers were favourable to the measure, because at present the law operates unfairly towards them.

These are true words. The man who tries to "farm the farmer" is beyond a doubt the worst enemy of the farmer. He should be shunned as the plague is shunned. But the farmers are too intelligent and clear-headed a class to be misled by these demagogues. They know that it is impossible for these deceivers to show them a country on the face of the globe where the farmers are better off and more contented than they are in this fair and fertile Dominion. It may be freely admitted that the Canadian farmer has his difficulties. But the farmer knows that many of these difficulties are common to the rest of the world, and are not induced by lack of attention to farmers interests on the part of Parliament, as the class of persons referred to by the Trade Review would lead them to suppose.

THE VENDORSHIP.

The temperance people are taking steps to enforce the Scott Act, which comes into force this week. The due observance of the law and its enforcement will depend to a great extent upon the men who will be entrusted by the Governor in Council with the legal sale of liquor. In other words the working of the Act will be either hampered or improved by the class of men who are appointed vendors. The responsibility of the Government and their duty to the temperance people is both clear and plain—the Government should appoint parties who will observe the law in every respect, and whose past records show that they will so observe it. Moreover, the Government should be guided, to a great extent, in these appointments by the wishes of the temperance people themselves.

THE LOBSTER FISHERY.

Discussion on the Bill and the Tax Imposed.

(Special correspondence of The Examiner.)

That portion of the act passed to amend the Fisheries Act which relates to lobster fishing is of especial interest to many of your readers. The question of licensing the industry of catching lobsters was debated at length two years ago.

In introducing the measure this session, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said that in deference to the strong feeling which had been expressed, he proposed to make the license fee imposed upon the canneries $10, instead of $25 as originally contemplated. The canner would receive an equivalent for this in the greater security in conducting his business, as well as protection from poaching and illicit packing. The brand which the bill proposes to give him will be valuable. The Government will also be enabled to enforce the close season regulation and to prevent the development of a practice which tends to destroy the business, and which is injuring it in the English market. The Minister went on to explain that during the close season there has grown up a habit of canning in a slipshod fashion, of putting all kinds of things in a can, which is soldered up and put on the market, with the result of depreciating the article in the market generally. The proposed fee of $10 would be $5 and so much per case.

Mr. Wray is of the opinion that the fee reduced to $5. There were hundreds of farmers on P. E. Island who put up each fifty or sixty cases of lobsters worth about $200. The tax would bear heavily on the farmers. The principle was good. Mr. Perry recognized the propriety of regulating the lobster fishery, but could not understand why any tax of $5 or 5 cents should be imposed. It was not from the canneries that the lobsters were taken, but from the poor fisherman who catches the lobsters. Notwithstanding Sir Hibbert Tupper's repeated corrections that the tax was not imposed on the fisherman, but on the canner, Mr. Perry went on to argue that each and every fisherman was being taxed $10.

Sir Hibbert Tupper pointed out that for want of proper regulations the lobster fishery of the United States had been ruined. While our lobster fisheries were diminishing, and while it was difficult to catch lobsters of the quality of a few years ago, it was at that time that some power should intervene to preserve that fishery. It was his experience as minister to find—no it was, he was glad to say—some people anxious to make political capital out of a matter like this. They endeavored to play to the poor fishermen, and to make it appear that the Government proposed some severe measure against the fisheries of the United States, and that the Government was tyrannical and despotic. He (the minister) would not hesitate to go before any fishing community in the Maritime Provinces and justify the principle of this bill. He had had communications from men on both sides of politics in favour of it, and the only men opposed to it were those who desired to catch votes instead of lobsters, and those who wished to catch lobsters illegally. The honest packers were favourable to the measure, because at present the law operates unfairly towards them.

Mr. Wray approved of protecting the lobster fishery, but objected to the tax. He did not think the Government inspection would amount to anything, or the Government brand be of much use. Mr. McLean approved of the measure, and considered the packers would offer no objection to it. Regarding the traps, he thought there would be a good deal of hardship if all the slots on the whole of the trap were required to be put an inch and a half apart. The former regulation referred to the lower slots, but now it was proposed to cover the whole trap. Of course this destroyed the trap. Then the penalty was to be not less than $400. What provision was there to be for the protection of the packer who set his traps out in good order? A good deal of trouble might be thrown upon the packer by fishermen taking the traps out before putting them in the water. Sir Hibbert Tupper replied there need be no fear on that score. The law could not fasten upon an innocent party any consequences in the case. Mr. Bowers said this inch and a half is no protection at all to the lobster. Sir Hibbert Tupper admitted it was not much. Mr. Bowers said he had measured plenty of traps with plenty spaces of two inches, and the traps took lobsters of seven inches. The size should either be two inches, or lobsters should not be taken under 10 1/2 inches.

Sir Hibbert Tupper agreed with Mr. Bowers, but he was incurring enough odium in making the present reform. Frankly, he would say, the measure proposed was only a minimum of protection, and allowed only the smallest lobsters to get out. Perhaps it would be worthless to the packer. There was a considerable discussion on the bill in the House. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries said that the provision that the branding should be done by such person as is designated by the Minister. This would involve expense and trouble, and he did not see what was to be gained by it. As long as the case of lobsters was marked, labelled and stamped in such manner as the Minister directs, that ought to be enough. Senator Grimrose, of Pictou, thought that instead of involving more trouble and difficulty to the packers, it would be a relief to them if the person authorized by the Minister did the stamping; it would save the packer trouble.

The clause stood and passed in its original form. Senator Power objected to the clause "And such mark, label or stamp shall state that the lobsters packed in the case or package so marked, labelled or stamped have been legally caught and packed." What was the object of this? The packer puts his name on the package and is made responsible for the quality of the fish by a subsequent provision. Why should he have to say that they have been legally caught and packed? A man who is capable of violating the law and packing lobsters which have been caught out of season, is quite capable of putting on a false label. Mr. Angers replied that the packer could certify to any person who was legally caught from the season in which they were caught. He could say so from the implements that had been used to catch them. Senator Primrose thought the clause absolutely necessary. Unfortunately he had experience, and he knew that fish had been sent to foreign markets through his mercantile house, which turned out, when opened, to be an altogether different description from what had been represented to him. Senator Power thought that no conscientious packer could put on such a stamp. A packer has no coming from the 19 to 20 miles, on either side of his factory, to sell him their lobsters. He buys them—he does not know how they have been caught, and he has to certify they have been legally caught and packed. Senator Kaubach said, if it happened that the spaces of the traps were not of the proper width, the fish were illegally caught, and stamped and put on the market. Senator Power's motion to strike out this provision was lost. Senator Power objected to the clause imposing a penalty on anyone who packages or partially empties a case or package after being stamped. It would hinder a packer taking out a can which has gone bad, and substituting a sound can. Sir Frank Smith said the responsibility was on the officer who stamped the cases. It would never do to allow the packer to interfere with cases which had been inspected and stamped because he might substitute inferior goods. The clause passed as it stood. Hon. Mr. Angers explained that the Minister of Fisheries can employ as inspectors a man who is a servant of the packer, so it is not necessary there should be an inspector for each factory, but some person under the owner of the factory may be authorized by the Minister to be responsible for the manner in which the canning is carried on. The inspector may be a person resident in the neighborhood, and he may inspect ten or twelve factories.

BRITAIN AS A COLONIZER. (The Star, Montreal.) A map of the world showing the British dominions in a distinct color is an eye opener not only to foreigners, but to British subjects themselves. An examination of the census of the world, with special reference to Great Britain's share of it, adds to the marvel. No one has any idea of the extent of the British Empire, and noting how on all the continents, at all the continental headlands, in all oceans, seas and the great gulfs Britain has her greatest harbors and fortresses, her coal stations, her ports of call, her islands especially fortified. Her possessions in many instances are so located that they practically command the seas for thousands of miles around. Take Australia as an example—a continent in itself. We may not hear much of some of the ports of call lying in the sea south of the Asiatic continent, and yet there are single ports in those waters, the possession of which would be worth millions of dollars a year. The best part of Asia is Britain's. She controls Egypt and she practically owns all of Africa south of the Equator that is worth anything, and when Egypt and South Africa are taken out of the dark continent there is nothing left. Every island in the Pacific that is worth having is British. The Dutch and the Portuguese who started out in the race for colonial extension practically disappeared long ago. The Spaniards' doom came early. The Germans and French, seeing the success of England's empire at colonization, have within the last twenty years set out to overtake her, but they find little or nothing left for them to seize. They came into the field 100 years too late. All this vast imperial domain has come to the Empire, primarily in the interests of commerce; and it is in the interests of commerce mainly that these possessions have been developed and in most cases Christianized. This is because brought with it just government, so that a people once brought under a British flag never desires to return to its former condition. These dominions are as much the possessions of Canadians as of Englishmen. We have as much right to be proud of them as the Englishman, Scotchman or Irishman has. They are as much a part of the national heritage as England or Canada is. When a disaster to British arms occurs in any country under the old flag we mourn with the whole Empire, and when any fresh acquisition of territory is made, do we not congratulate ourselves on the extension of the national domain? This idea of Imperial rule commends itself to our British blood. It is born in Canadians as in British youth in the old land.
