15,000 Thrilled By Air Show Despite Low Ceiling

Upwards of 15,000 people attended the Centennial Aviation Show Saturday afternoon at the Charlottetown Airport. Although lowering skies curtailed the performance of the participating aircraft and prevented the Sabre jets and Neptune bombers from leaving the ground, the large crowd was well satisfied that they had seen one of the finest aviation displays to ever come to this city.

The show was officially opened by Mr. Foster Hewitt, internationally famous sportscaster whose voice as a broadcaster of National Hockey League games has become famous to Canadians from coast to coast.

Mr. Hewitt said, "I am pleased to be here today and to share in your Centennial festivities. Because you were good enough to invite me, I have learned many interesting things about your province."

"I have read that when Jacques Cartier got his first glimpse of this island more than four centuries ago, he was pleased to say that all the land was low and the most beautiful possible to see: full of meadows and beautiful trees," continued Mr. Hewitt. "As I flew over it yesterday, I agreed that Cartier's opinion in 1534 is still confirmed in 1955."

"Not only is your island rich and beautiful," added Mr. Hewitt, "but I have reason to believe its people are proud and independent. I have been told that when Prince Edward Island joined Confederation in 1873, it was your understanding that the rest of Canada had been annexed to this island."
