BOTH OVER 21

"I don't get it myself. But when he isn't with her, he's keeping tabs on her. Say, Wally, why don't you make talk with this Ayman and see what he's up to?"

"Hardly worth while, is it?" returned the young man negligently. "Maybe not. When do I get a camera on you and the gal?"

"Any time you can catch her. That's your headache."

Again Mr. Metzger bewailed the lack of cooperation, and Wallis volunteered to see what he could do. Some degree of strategy was necessary to segregate Miss McCabe from her guard of honor.

When he did get her aside she exhaled a long breath. "What a morning!"

"Wires crossed? Anything I can do about it?"

"If you want to be an angel child you might keep an eye on me. You know the little half deck where you came to the aid of the party last night?"

"He needed. If you see anything like an O. S. expression on me, meet me there as soon as possible after ward. Want to walk me round the deck a couple of times now?"

"I and how many times more?"

"Aren't you exclusive! All right, walk is out. We'll climb to the sun deck and cheer up Mr. Metzger."

Hardly had they taken their chairs beside that long-suffering executive, when detachments of youths strolled up to man the adjacent rail and direct upon the girl an ocular battery of reproach and indignation which she bilthely ignored.

"I was thinking it's about time you two got together," observed Mr. Metzger.

"Yes, I finally cornered him," said the girl. He's been dodging me."

"Huh! How about putting a touch of romance into it?"

"I think it would be wonderful. But I can't do it all alone. It's so difficult for an inexperienced girl to know what to do with a hard-boiled cynic like Mr. Kane," she sighed.

Mr. Metzger eyed the row of resentful railbirds. "Inexperienced, huh? What's the Lodge of Sorrow over there?"

"That represents mixed dates and scrambled romances, Malda told him. "And now you're asking me to start another. Any idea how I should begin?"

Mr. Metzger perked up. "I ran a competition once for the McCoy-Marks theater chain in New England. The principles got married on the stage at our expense and we paid for the honeymoon, too."

Malda clasped her hands. "Why didn't you think of it sooner?"

"It ain't too late now," returned the practical minded theater man. "Not if you two was to hit it off."

"Is this a proxy proposal?"

"Metzy has full authority to act for me," said Wallis.

"Well, what I mean, Lex-Lohengrin would do as much in this case."

"So far this trip," said the girl dreamily, "I've had eight propositions put up to me; five honorable, two doubtful, and one awful. This is the first commercial. Was the theater marriage a success, Mr. Metzger?"

"Was it! Made every front page in Boston. With pictures. "I'm afraid that tears it." She stole a smiling glance at Wallis. "Newspaper publicity would be aftermath. Wouldn't you say it would be aftermath, Mr. Kane?"

"There are also aftermath features to a wedding," he pointed out.

"What's your camera grouch anyway, girl?" demanded Mr. Metzger. "There's nothing wrong with your face."

"Is that my traveling pal's opinion also?"

"I'll go this far," responded Wallis generously. "In certain lights and with a good camera man you might be regarded by some people as not unattractive."

"Flatterer! Do you know, Mr. Metzger, I might almost come to like this young friend of yours."

"Crash goes the old heart!"

"At first," she continued thoughtfully, "I had you classed among the lower invertebrates. I still don't get the angle of your window-display clothes and the man-about-town pose."

"It ain't pose. It's the McCoy," protested Mr. Metzger.

"Anyway I'm ready to welcome you into this nine-day fadeout of mine."

"With pictures?" asked Wallis, hoping to boost his friend's game.

"It's a mania. If I don't like to be taken, why should I?"

"No reason at all, except possibly an unfeminine sense of fair play."

"What's curdled you?" she asked, wide-eyed. "You took my part on the pier."

"Well, I'm taking Metzy's part now."

to be good feeling and affection between in-laws. For in-laws can be mighty good friends and an ever-present help in times of trouble.

Many a father-in-law and mother-in-law come to the rescue with personal and financial help when the matrimonial bark of a young couple is about to be wrecked. And many an old man and woman have their last days made happy and comfortable by the love and devotion of a daughter-in-law or a son-in-law.

The in-law relationship, then, being such a vital one, it is strange that we should be so stupid as to regard it lightly, and to think that it is a matter of chance whether we get along with our in-laws or not. Such is far from being the case. The matter rests entirely in our own hands and depends upon the adroitness, the good feeling, the good sense and the tact with which we handle the situation.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I have met a girl with whom I have fallen deeply in love. Before meeting her I never took a girl out without expecting a lot of petting, but this girl seemed so different from the others that I was afraid to broach the subject for fear she wouldn't go out with me again. Now I have gone with her for eight months and I have never even kissed her or told her that I love her. She is just as impersonal about our relationship as the day I met her. Why is it so hard to make love to a girl you really care for when it is so easy to hand girls you don't care for a big line without a word of Lex-Lohengrin is paying the freight. All they ask in return is a little publicity, and Metzy is going to be in wrong if he doesn't produce it. Yet when anyone suggests a camera you shy off as if you were being peeped for the Rogues' Gallery. Why so private?"

Her lips took on an aggrieved curve. I'm just a stepchild here. I shall go where I'm appreciated at my true worth." She stood up and was at once engulfed in the rush of the railbirds.

A small mummie of glass and metal peeped from beneath the Metzger rug. "I got a few shots. What I need is some good ones of the two of you together. You don't like her much, do you, boy?"

As much as I intend to," was the reply, given with a touch of grimace.

The managerial head wagged. "I don't get her. Sometimes I think she's a swell kid. Then again I'd like to sock her."

"Better get your film first, though."

"You said it. But how?"

truth in it? What shall I do?

MISERABLE

ANSWER: The thing to do is to tell the girl how you love her and find out how you stand with her. Her impersonal attitude toward you need not discourage you. That is her defense as a lady against your silence. She is too refined and self-respecting to throw herself at your head, and she is simply waiting for you to speak. The average girl does most of the courting nowadays and so when you meet one who waits for the man to do it you don't know how to take it. That is all of your trouble.

The reason why it is hard to make love to a girl you really care for, but easy enough to string one along when you are just playing at love, is because in the one case everything is at stake, and in the other nothing is at stake.

DEAR MISS DIX: I am engaged to a young man who is everything I could desire in a man, except that he is bald. I don't mind it, except that people are always commenting on it and that gets on my nerves. Will this ruin our married life if I marry him?

MARY

ANSWER: It will ruin your married life if you are silly enough to let the young man's lack of hair make you ashamed of him. But why should you let a little thing like that worry you? It is not what is on the outside of a man's head but what is on the inside that counts, and if he lacked brains instead of hair you would have a right to be mortified.
