wasn't a loud stamp, but it was loud enough to reach six wide-open ears. For a long moment Reddy and Mrs. Reddy and Old Man Coyote stood perfectly still, their sharp ears cocked forward to catch every little sound. Mrs. Lightfoot rustled a few dead leaves under her feet. It was a very faint sound, but those listening ears caught it. At once the three hunters began to move forward toward the windfall. Reddy and Mrs. Reddy went together. Old Man Coyote kept by himself. babies were hiding. Mrs. Lightfoot moved back, keeping out of their sight. She whistled sharply. All three recognized her danger signal. It made them all the more sure that those fawns were somewhere under that windfall. Reddy Fox crept under it at one place, Mrs. Reddy at another, and Old Man Coyote at a third. Mrs. Lightfoot softly sighed her relief.
