THE PATENT TELESCOPIC OVEN

This Oven represents the "Star" Cooking Stove, with oven and end-lining drawn out, as in the act of cleaning, or replacing a new lining.

IS STILL AHEAD OF ALL COMPETITORS.

THIS Patent Oven is put on all my Elevated Oven Cooking Stoves, such as the Star, Niagara, Waterloo, &c. Is Easily Cleaned, by simply drawing the end and lining from the oven, brushing out the soot and replacing them again—thoroughly cleaning or inserting a new lining in five minutes time.

The thousands using this Oven admit it to be worth at least Ten Dollars more than Stoves with the ordinary oven. At the same time please keep in view the fact that it costs the trade or retail purchaser no more than the same stove without this valuable improvement.

When buying, ask for FAWCETT'S PATENT TELESCOPIC OVEN. If your dealer has none on hand, have him send, or send your order direct to the Sackville Foundry. No other Foundry in the Dominion of Canada is able to offer this undoubted advantage, as I am the Inventor, Sole Manufacturer and Patentee.

I am adding several New and Handsome Patterns this season which, with my former variety of one hundred different styles and sizes of Cooking, Parlor, Office and Hall Stoves. Also—Farmers' Boilers, Hollow-ware, Ploughs, &c., comprises the largest and best assortment made in the Maritime Provinces.

Customers will find my Terms Liberal and, regarding prices, I will not be undersold.

To the Electors of the First District for King's County for the Legislative Council.

GENTLEMEN,—At the earnest request of a number of you, I offer myself as a candidate to fill the vacancy in the Legislative Council, occasioned by the death of the late Lawrence Kichham, Esq.

I solicit your suffrages on the present occasion in the interest of the Liberal Conservative party; although, if elected, I shall support the present Administration in such measures only as I consider to be for the good of the country. I will not promise to support the present or any other Government, unless I believe them to be administering the affairs of the Province so as to keep down taxation, secure Provincial rights, and promote the general welfare of the people. Owing to the bad state of the roads at this season of the year, it will, I fear, be impossible for me to make a personal canvass of the entire District; but I trust to be able to meet you at public meetings before the election, when I can more fully give you my views on questions affecting your interests. Respectfully soliciting your votes, I remain, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,
CHARLES McEACHEN.

ADAM BEDE.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Adam had on his working-dress again now—for he had thrown off the other with a sense of relief as soon as he came home, and if he had had the basket of tools over his shoulder, he might have been taken with his pale wasted face, for the spectre of the Adam Bede who entered the Grove on that August evening eight months ago. But he had no basket of tools, and he was not walking with the old erectness, looking keenly around him; his hands were thrust in his side pockets, and his eyes rested chiefly on the ground. He had not long entered the Grove, and now he paused before a beech. He knew that tree well; it was the boundary mark of his youth—the sign to him of the time when some of his earliest, strongest feelings had left him.

He felt sure they would never return. And yet, at this moment, there was a stirring affection at the remembrance of that Arthur Donnithorne whom he had believed in before he had come up to this beech eight months ago. It was affection for the dead; that Arthur existed no longer.

He was disturbed by the sound of approaching footsteps, but the beech stood at a turning in the road, and he could not see who was coming, until the tall slim figure in deep mourning suddenly stood before him at only two yards' distance. They both started, and looked at each other in silence. Often, in the last fortnight, Adam had imagined himself as close to Arthur as this, assailing him with words that should be as harrowing as the voice of remorse, forcing upon him a just share in the misery he had caused; and often, too, he had told himself that such a meeting had better not be. But in imagining the meeting he had always seen Arthur as he had met him on that evening in the Grove, florid, careless, light of speech; and the figure before him touched him with the signs of suffering. Adam knew what suffering was—he could not lay a cruel finger on a bruised man. He felt no impulse that he needed to resist; silence was more just than reproach. Arthur was the first to speak.

'Adam,' he said quietly, 'it may be a good thing that we have met here, I wished to see you. I should have asked to see you to-morrow.'

He paused, but Adam said nothing. 'I know it is painful to you to meet me,' Arthur went on, 'but it is not likely to happen again for years to come.'

'No, sir,' said Adam, coldly, 'that was what I meant to write to you to-morrow, as it would be better all dealings should be at an end between us, and somebody else put in my place.'

Arthur felt the answer keenly, and it was not without an effort that he spoke again.

'It was partly on that subject I wished to speak to you. I don't want to lessen your indignation against me, or ask you to do anything for my sake. I only wish to ask you if you will help me to lessen the evil consequences of the past, which is unchangeable. I don't mean consequences to myself, but to others. It is but little I can do, I know. I know the worst consequences will remain; but something may be done, and you can help me. Will you listen to me patiently?'

'Yes, sir,' said Adam, after some hesitation; 'I'll hear what it is. If I can help mend anything, I will. Anger'll mend nothing, I know. We've had enough of that.'

'I was going to the Hermitage,' said Arthur. 'Will you go there with me and sit down? We can talk better there.'

The Hermitage had never been entered since they left together, for Arthur had locked up the key in his desk. And now, when he opened the door, there was the candle burned out in the socket; there was the chair in the same place where Adam remembered sitting; there was the waste-paper basket full of scraps, and deep down in it, Arthur felt in an instant, there was the little pink silk handkerchief. It would have been painful to enter this place if their previous thoughts had been less painful.

They sat down opposite each other in the old places, and Arthur said, 'I am going away, Adam; I'm going into the army.'

Poor Arthur felt that Adam ought to be affected by this announcement—ought to have a movement of sympathy toward him. But Adam's lips remained firmly closed, and the expression of his face unchanged.

'What I want to say to you,' Arthur continued, 'is this: one of my reasons for going away is, that no one else may leave Hayslope—may leave their home on my account. I would do anything, there is no sacrifice I would not make, to prevent any further injury to others through my—through what has happened.'

Arthur's words had precisely the opposite effect to that he had anticipated. Adam thought he perceived in them that notion of compensation for irretrievable wrong, that self-soothing attempt to make evil bear the same results as good, which most of all roused his indignation. He was as strongly impelled to lock painful thoughts right in the face, as Arthur was to turn his eyes away from them. Moreover, he had the wakeful suspicious pride of a poor man in the presence of a rich man. He felt his old severity returning as he said, 'The time's passed for that, sir. A man should make sacrifices to keep clear of doing a wrong; sacrifices won't undo it when it's done. When people's feelings have got a deadly wound, they can't be cured with favors.'

'Favors,' said Arthur passionately; 'no; how can you suppose that I meant that? But the Poyzers—Mr. Irwine tells me the Poyzers mean to leave the place where they have lived so many years—for generations. Don't you see, as Mr. Irwine does, that if they could be persuaded to overcome the feeling that drives them away, it would be much better for them in the end to remain on the old spot, among the friends and neighbors who know them.'

'That's true,' said Adam coldly. 'But then, sir, folks' feelings are not so easily overcome. It'll be hard for Martin Poyzer to go to a strange place, among strange faces, when he's been bred up on the Hall Farm, and his father before him; but then it'd be harder for a man with his feelings to stay. I don't see how the thing's to be made any other than hard. There's a sort o' damage, sir, that can't be made up for.'

Eastern Notes.

The Legislative Council Election is now the general conversational topic. Mr. McEachen, the popular resident candidate, receives a hearty and encouraging support in all sections of the district. The Grits are by no means enthusiastic in support of their candidate, who is certainly not the choice of a large number of their party, and will consequently meet with their determined opposition.

To give your readers an idea of the reception which Mr. Bowers meets with in this locality, an account of a meeting addressed by that gentleman at Rollo Bay Cross a few evenings ago, will be all sufficient. On Monday, the 4th inst., a notice was posted at Rollo Bay Cross of a meeting to be addressed by Mr. Bowers that evening at six o'clock. This notice contained an invitation for the Government candidates to attend. But how Mr. McEachen, residing as he does at such a distance from the place was to hear of the meeting and be present a few hours from the posting of the notice was a circumstance probably previously considered by those interested in his being absent. At 6 o'clock Mr. Bowers was present at the appointed place; but for some time he was alone. About 7.30 o'clock, however, about a dozen persons, attracted by curiosity, assembled on the scene; and in a small building, used as a workshop by day and as a hen-roost and pigsty by night, Mr. Bowers addressed this small audience; while directly before the door, attached to a load of straw, stood an intelligent looking pony acting in the capacity of sentry. The nature of the discourse the general public was not able to ascertain, as even standing accommodation could scarcely be afforded to more than a dozen persons. But we may well imagine with what pathos the eloquent speaker appealed to the compassion of his hearers to stand by him in the coming contest, in consideration of his present circumstances, being now without any occupation whatever, and if elected his seasonal allowance would be some assistance, and his solicitations and emphatic assurances that if elected he would in their service exert to the utmost extent that indomitable energy, perseverance and well known industry, which he exhibited while editor of the New Era and in the other various capacities which he has figured during his brilliant career.

Yours truly,
J. D. G.

Bear River, May 5, 1885.

Neglected Opportunities.

MOTHERS AND THE EARLY EDUCATION OF CHILDREN.

If you should go into any home in the land where even a limited amount of intelligence prevailed, and ask the question, "Do you take an interest in the school life of your child?" you would be met by an indignant "I do." If you pursued the matter further, and said, "How do you interest yourself?" there would be no hesitation in saying, "I always send them unless they are sick, and I see that they leave home in time to reach the schoolhouse at the proper hour." The questioner would be told that they had but the most vague and chaotic ideas as to the life in the schoolroom, the studies their children are pursuing, the kind of training given, or its adaptability to the future of the child, the child's talents or natural bent. Schools at present are adapted to display the beauty of certain systems of education, and results are shown by the averages, maintained at what a tremendous price the impaired and enfeebled powers of many of the (3) pupils testify.

Societies may talk, individuals may grow eloquent, but until fathers and mothers realize the importance of educating children in harmony with their talents and the possibilities of their future, but little will be accomplished.

Glass drinking cups have been found in Anglo Saxon graves, and they are all round bottomed. Such cups could not be made to stand upright, and it has been supposed they were so designed in order to cause the drinker to empty them at once. The feature is said to have given rise to the word tumbler, which has been applied to our drinking vessels, though these do not possess the curious shape of the ancient cups.

The Russian commission entrusted with the publication of the correspondence of Peter the Great has collected 8,000 letters and other documents, among which are the copy books used by the Emperor when a child, and one letter written to his mother in 1688 from Pereyasloff, giving her an account of the work of rigging the ships then in course of construction on the lake of that name.

Sir Justin Aylmer, the heir to an ancient English Baronetcy, having a rent-roll of $35,000 a year, young, handsome, and engaged, fell from a bicycle the other day and broke his neck.

Russia has a population of about 100,000,000; has a public debt of about $3,500,000,000; she spends about $10,000,000 a year above her revenues.
