It's wise "safety insurance" to make your dressings with the best vinegar you can buy—just as you make your salads with good fruits and vegetables. That's why I urge you to ask for HEINZ VINEGARS—aged and mellowed in wood!... Heins White Vinegar—marvelous for light salads and smooth, boiled dressings... Heins Malt Vinegar—delicious for heartier salads!

The Golden Girl

"Oh!" said Gloria in a startled tone. "I just came—"
"I thought you would if I waited long enough," said Jack. "Yes, lady, the book is here, and pretty stodgey reading if you should inquire. Kelly and I have been standing guard over it for a good half hour. Ever since the typewriter stopped clicking. And if you don't think that's devotion, try it yourself. There's a bush here with a million claws on it. Yes, thanks, I'm coming in."

He gave a light spring and swung expertly over the rail. "I thought I'd better do my scouting from the outside," he confided. "If you'd seen me first you'd have discovered that you were a Busy Secretary and marched off again. Now that we're here let's sit down and be clubby. We ought to have a lot to say to each other. It wasn't possible to be angry with anyone so cheerfully good-natured. A dimple quivered at the corner of her mouth. He'd lay traps for her, would he?"

"I'm afraid you won't have time to see you. They arrived just before you came out."

"Not for me. When any of my little playmates arrive anywhere they make themselves heard. It's probably a couple of nice old ladies who have come to see Aunt Harriet."

"One of them is a man. I saw him as I came down the stairs, and I heard Miss Endicott say that my friend of yours was welcome."

"Persistent woman! We'll settle this right now!"
Tall shrubbery hid the lower part of the house from their view, but two easy steps took him up on the railing where, by canting himself outward by one hand, he had a clear vista with a patch of drive at one end. He dodged back under the clematis and swung down again.
"It's a snappy car, but they're no friends of mine. I know my license plates and that one doesn't run with my mob at all. Probably some bright lad crashing the gates with a subscription list. I like it better here, thank you. See here, just beyond those evergreens, standing in front of the garage, there's a new roadster. I've had my eye on it for weeks and now it's mine and waiting for you to come along and help me try it out. We'll buzz up the road again and stop off at Scarlott's, and when we're tired of that we can hit the road again and pick up another place for dinner and—oh well, just have a good time. Come on! I dare you!"

Gloria shook her head rather fast because she was afraid she might weaken. This was simply a ghastly bore, being prim and dutiful Miss Staunton who mustn't allow herself to take a ride with her employer's nephew—or any other man, probably. And to stop at Scarlott's—she'd never even seen Scarlott's—and maybe dance or go swimming, and have something jolly to eat and see a lot of pleasant and gay people, just having a good time. She was almost tempted to go anyway. No she'd never dare. Something else came edging her mind, an irritating imp popping up to spoil everything. Chertlon County fours.

Miss Endicott was selling her gilt-edged securities, dipping into her principal, and Jack Moreland, who had never earned a cent in his life, had added a supercharged roadster to his string. Just like that.

"Sorry," she said coolly. "I couldn't possibly go."
"So that's that." He looked puzzled and a little dogged. "All right, let's get down to cases. Why is it that you won't go anywhere with me and always get so darned busy the minute I come around? No
