AMONG THE FARMERS

BUTTER PROSPECTS

Last week's announcement that the government had decided to raise its selling price for butter from 58 cents to 63 cents already appears to have produced an effect upon the markets. When the C.F.A. met the Cabinet on July 31 it asked for an increase in the floor to 62 cents and that the carrying charges be added on to the 58 cents for storage butter. We have no information as to what the government plans are for the floor price but there is reason to believe that the government's action in increasing the wholesale price will likely have, until another flush season, the same effect as an increase in the floor.

Actually up to the present time this season farmers have been getting the same price for butter as it was they were getting ten years ago. It has required a lot of tenacity and efficiency to stay in business in the face of spiraling farm costs. Factories which have held their butter as well as some of those in the trade stand to make a profit in their holdings, this would likely have happened anyhow regardless of government action as there was every prospect for an increase in butter prices. In any event the cream producer will get a little more money for his efforts and he has been waiting a long time for it.

NUFFIELD SCHOLARSHIP

Once more through the Federation of Agriculture the Nuffield Foundation of England is offering to two young Canadian farmers the opportunity of studying old world agriculture for a period of six months. Generally applicants should be between the age of 30 and 35 but there is some latitude in this.

Any young farmer who is interested in such a scholarship may obtain further information and application forms by contacting the Prince Edward Island Federation of Agriculture, Box 546, Charlottetown. Applications must reach the C.F.A. office before October 15, for this reason those interested should not delay in seeking further information. If selected the candidates would leave for England early in the spring of 1958.

Hens Must Produce Every Other Day Or Be Roasted

ESSEK, Ont. (CP) — Douglas McBeth and his brother William have turned the production of eggs into a life-or-death business for their 1,800 hens. The hens in what they call their "henitentiary" must have a production record of at least 50 per cent—one egg every two days—or off they go to somebody's roasting pan. The hens however have everything in their favor. They live in a building that measures 30 by 160 feet, holding 1,800 wire cages. The project, filled with pullets, cost $1,200 and "it was the best investment we ever made," says Doug.

WORK AS TEAM

For the McBeths the "egg factory" has helped eliminate food diseases and boosted production. Weather has little effect. Whether it's cold or warm, production averages more than 1,300 eggs daily, and the percentage of "rejects" is less than one in 100. The McBeths the "egg factory" is a family affair. The work of feeding, gathering and cleaning eggs is done by teamwork. Mrs. McBeth leads off the parade through the barn each morning. Her job is to record the pullets which fail to lay an egg. She uses a clothespin to mark the failure. Too many failures and the hen is released from egg laying.

Doug and his seven-year-old son, Ronald, follow on her heels. They gather the eggs for trays on the gathering cart and in 30 minutes the work is completed. They go back to the start of the line and the 20-minute job of feeding begins. Four hundred pounds of specially-mixed feed is placed in the troughs daily. Running water is available to the hens at all times. SYSTEMATIC PLAN The cages are built three feet from the ground, to save bending over. The floor of the cages is inclined, so that the egg rolls forward, away from the hen, reducing the need for cleaning the eggs and cutting down breakage. The McBeths also have a scientific program for replacement. In a special pen, young pullets are raised from day-old chicks, obtained from a hatchery. Over the year, about three-quarters of the hens will be replaced to make room for more productive birds. Mr. McBeth is more than pleased with the venture. "We wanted specialized farming, and results have exceeded our expectations," he said. "With everything included it costs us $26 a day to feed and maintain the egg factory. So far we have had wonderful results, and we're thinking of expanding."

Knudson, Mr. Ben Dunkelmann, President and General Manager of Tip Top Tailors Limited, stated that his company sells nearly a quarter of a million made-to-measure suits a year. Mr. Dunkelmann is on his annual trip through the Maritime Provinces to inspect the company's branches. This Canada-wide organization has more than 60 company-owned branches and more than 700 dealers in every corner of Canada.
