HAPPENINGS OF THE WEEK

The Lieutenant-Governor of Alberta, the Honourable John J. Bowlen is at present a distinguished visitor to his native province. Certainly Governor Bowlen is a great honour not only to Prince Edward Island and Alberta, but to the land of his ancestors which has produced so many illustrious statesmen — Ireland!

Historic old Government House will be in festive mood this evening when His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Bowlen entertain in honour of His Honour John J. Bowlen, the Lieutenant-Governor of Alberta.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Alberta had dinner Thursday evening at the residence of his niece Mrs. John Reddin and Mr. Reddin in Southport. This dinner in honour of the Governor was a happy family gathering. Mrs. J. J. Curley, a sister of Governor Bowlen, and Mr. Curley were present, also Dr. and Mrs. J. D. Reddin of Dr. Stewart. Later in the evening another niece Mrs. Joseph Hoyley and Mr. Hoyley entertained at their residence, when friends and relatives called to greet the Governor.

Senator John T. Hackett of Montreal has been in the province this past week.

Foster and Lady Cochrane of Culter, have recently had their engagement announced in Great Britain. Miss Foster and her brother Mr. Neil Foster were guests for almost five years of Mrs. W. R. Aitken and the late Mr. Aitken.

Miss Margaret Hyndman O. C. has been especially mentioned in November-December Business and Professional Woman's magazine. At the annual Emblem Breakfast held early in June, the seven Clubs in Metropolitan Toronto presented Miss Hyndman with a life membership in the Canadian Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs. Mrs. Hazel Laycock, guest speaker at the breakfast, presented Miss Hyndman with her life membership pin and the chairman of the Council presented the scroll signifying her life membership in Federation. Young Abe was a dreamer, but he was also a fighter. Sir Winston Churchill in his autobiography tells us that he was not studious at school, but that he read constantly — he knew his English. Andrew Carnegie said: "I choose free libraries as the best agencies for improving the masses of the people, because they give nothing for nothing. They only help those who help themselves. They never pauperize."

WED AT IMMACULATE CONCEPTION CHURCH

A profusion of autumn flowers graced the main altar and sanctuary rail for the wedding at Immaculate Conception Church, Palmer Road, of Mary Jean, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Austin Aylward, Pleasant View, and Mr. J. Elmer Blanchard, son of Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Blanchard, Charlottetown. Rev. Patrick Walsh performed the ceremony and officiated at the Nuptial Mass.

The bride wore a floor-length gown of white Chantilly lace and nylon net over slipper satin featuring a fitted bodice with mandarin collar. The bouffant skirt was of ruffled nylon net with wide inserts of lace falling in unpressed pleats. A full jet cap held her chapel veil and she carried a white prayer book with pink rosebuds, and white streamers with lily-of-the-valley and baby fern. She wore a single strand of pearls with matching earrings.

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs. Aylward chose a teal blue dress with blue and navy accessories topped by a silver fox cape. Her corsage was of red roses. The mother of the groom wore an orchid dress with black accessories, grey squirrel neckpiece and yellow roses an corsage.

The bride's table, decorated with autumn flowers, was centred with a three-tiered wedding cake. Mr. Somerled Trainor was master of ceremonies. Piano selections were played by Mrs. Fraser and Miss Murnaghan sang "I Love You Truly" during the cutting of the cake. Rev. Richard Ellsworth proposed the toast to the bride.

MORNING SMILE

"Reaching for a rare plant, he slipped over the cliff, and as he fell, he gathered momentum."

"Oh George," she interrupted. "The poor man! What an enthusiast he must have been. Fancy picking flowers even as he fell."

The road was stoney, pot-holed, and corrugated, and was made up almost entirely of twists, turns, hairpin bends, cut out of the side of the mountains, with a rock wall on one side, and a sheer drop on the other, and then short, straight bits, built up, with a sheer drop on both sides.

From the start we had noticed a cableway slung from top to top of the mountains, with small carriers travelling back and forth along it continuously. We kept following it, by our devious course, deeper and deeper into the mountains, wondering where it was going and why. We eventually arrived in Havoc Cleft, just after sunset, having completed the 27 miles from Barberton in just over three hours!

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

"This," Mack said with a proud smile, when he made an early call at this house this morning, "is my secret!" He held up a muskrat, damp and dead by the naked broadish tail.

"Not bad for my first morning," he commented. "You know," he explained, "you can't expect too much of me. I'm not like Jamie and Gage—they're old trappers. They can catch a 'coon or a fox just as easy as one of these. But," he nodded, "I'll learn!"

His cheeks were flushed with the frost-touch of the clean new day which had given him and his father a trip to his short trapline down along the millstream.

"Daddy said when we came to that last trap—you know where it is," he nodded, "I think you have something in this one, Mack" and he smiled happily at the remembrance of it. "I believe that I have!"

There was rime of frost on the firs—there where blossomed the smiling clovers and daisies of summer. And down where the patient heron fished then, an extent of ice reached out on the dark of the millpond. November draws us closer and close to the winter.

Only so many days now till Christmas—we hear the children echo the pronouncements of the radio happily these days. How soon too the calendar will point out the fact that winter is here.

We much enjoy these days on the farm. Now we are sneezing down for the white days ahead. Now the cattle-kind that were the pride of the pastures are gathered in to the stables, and come there at night to learn something of the meaning of content. Warm and comfortable they rest in the stalls, the cows and "feeders, and the little calves cuddled down in the nook of hay, the children have prepared for them there.

The horses fidget a bit at our coming, nuzzling at their grain-boxes, begging James for his parting favor of meal. The foal we must visit too, off now in a stall of his own-weaned, but as Mack can appreciate "a little lonesome

Cover-Up For Suitcases

If you want your luggage to last longer, use luggage covers to protect the pieces from scuff marks and stains en route or in storage. Covers also hide an ancient but a still sturdy suitcase and therefore prolong its use.

Covers are always acceptable as gifts and they are so easy to make. The best fabric is heavy, durable cotton or linen, pre-shrunk so that it can be laundered whenever necessary.

Make a careful pattern with newspaper by tracing around the suitcase on three of the six sides. Cut each piece of fabric in duplicate so that only three pattern pieces are necessary. Allow five-eighths of an inch all around for seams.

Carefully cut material from the patterns and pin it on the suitcase to make sure of perfect fit. Mark and cut an opening in the center through which the handle will protrude. Then, bind the

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl Is Hurt When Mother Lends Her Doll

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some weeks ago I gave a beautiful doll to my niece, who is 8 years old. Sally treasures the doll and wants to keep it in perfect condition. But while she is at school or out playing, her mother (my sister-in-law) allows a neighbor child, 3, to handle the doll, take off the shoes and stockings, etc.

Sally resents this, but the mother insists there is nothing wrong in letting the other child play with the doll; and says, in fact, that Sally is being selfish and reluctant to share her toys. I disagree with her and side with Sally. We would appreciate your clarifying comment. H.C.

MISSSES CUE

DEAR H.C.: Sally's mother is making a mistake, in trying as she thinks to give Sally an example of generosity by this method. From the child's viewpoint she is proving nothing, except that there is no justice, apparently.

All children should be taught respect for property rights—a lesson that has to be mastered, in building the framework of good character. And the lesson is best assimilated from the start, if a child has properties of his own, cherished by him, and respected as such by his guardians and playmates. This is the common sense beginning, in promoting respect for ownership rights.

Naturally a child should be trained to share too, with reasons, nobody lives to himself alone in the human scene. But it isn't teaching Sally altruism, or the joys of sharing, to go over her head, or behind her back, against her wishes, to lend her best doll to a 3-year-old. It simply amounts to paternal disloyalty.

BE PERSUASIVE

Sally's mother ought to appeal to Sally's feelings, and try to induce her to save the doll, and the satisfactions of being unselfish. Or she might tactfully negotiate an exchange of favors with the other household—so that Sally would rate some special treat, in return for sharing her doll.

However, if Sally remains immovably defensive in wanting the doll all to herself, that specific sentiment should be respected; and other opportunities found for seeding the practise of charity in her.

SENSE OF HUMOR

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: We are a busy happy farm couple, both of a rather serious nature. We feel that a sense of humor would help us to enjoy both our family and our work more. (Mom teaches as a sideline.) But the problem is—how to develop a sense of humor? Can you recommend some books that might help?

We especially feel the need of help in handling and humoring boys of 12 and 13. Every book you pick up says: "But what book tells us how to get one?" H.J.

THIS IS HUMOR

DEAR H.J.: I don't know of any humor as such, although some of Mark Twain's novels embody the essence of it. The faculty consists in seeing persons, events and situations objectively, with detachment through happy lenses. In dealing with boys 12 and 13, it should also include occupying their shoes (imaginatively), and passing judgment on yourself from their angle, while you do your adult best for them. This ought to give you many a chuckle, down in your soul, and keep you sympathetic with young in heart. M.H.

For a really professional job, invest in a heavy upholstery slip cover zipper, long enough to go around two sides and the bottom seam of the cover. Otherwise, use grippers, snaps or buttons.
